It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

FOR the authenticity of the portrait-head of Menander, the frontispiece, it may be urged that a reasonable consensus¹ of expert opinion has come to favour this bust, now in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts,² as second only, if not equal, to the Copenhagen portrait. The resemblance between this and the face of the comic poet on the Lateran relief (facing page 131) re-enforces the identification, if either one is accepted as Menander.

The beardless comic poet of the relief, who holds in his left hand one of the masks³ apparently set out by his companion¹ from the cupboard behind her, has on the table before him the excerpted rôle (?) belonging to the mask. Above is the lectern-frame to hold the open scroll. The fingers of the poet's right hand seem to beat accompaniment to the recitation. (See Studniczka, op. cit. p. 26.)

THE TRANSLATION²

The editor wishes to crave indulgence from the reader in two particulars. First, for the occasional juxtaposition of prose and verse in his translation. In the case of mutilated or much-restored text and doubtful context prose translations or summaries seemed inevitable, and in the case of the minor fragments the translator felt that it was admissible to treat each one as a unit, versifying those only which seem more vivid in verse. Secondly, the use of the six-stress iambic verse in translating the corresponding Greek trimeters is, as the translator

² The translator wishes to express his indebtedness for valuable help received from his colleague, Professor W. C. Bronson.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

is well aware, somewhat unfamiliar¹ to English ears, but the continuity of the Greek, often unbroken from line to line, seems to him to be thus more easily reproduced, treated as a tertium quid between prose and verse.

The translator has nowhere intentionally forced the meaning to suit the metre and, finally, he has not felt at liberty to try to make the English more racy than the original by introducing tempting, but anachronistic, modern colloquialisms that would obscure the milieu of Menander.

THE TRANSMISSION OF MENANDER

What we now possess of Menander in connected scenes has been restored to us since 1891 and, for the most part, since 1905. The traditional estimate of his plays, verifiable only by numerous minor fragments and by the uncertain reflection in Roman Comedy, had become so firmly imbedded in our literary creed that the opportunity for a more independent opinion, based upon recent discoveries of manuscripts, has entailed an excessive reaction in the minds of some competent critics. This was,

¹ R. Browning's long poem, Fifine at the Fair, might be cited as a precedent. In that poem, however, the sixth stress is chaperoned by rhyme.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

perhaps, inevitable. Exaggerated or uncritical praise provokes unmerited depreciation.¹ The off-hand pairing² of Menander and Aristophanes is a mis-mating not only in rank, but also in literary purpose and method.

The verdict³ passed upon Menander by Greeks

¹ As in 1897 with the rediscovered Bacchylides.

In the next century Aulus Gellius in his learned mosaic (Noctes Atticae, ii. 23, 12, 15, 21; iii. 16, 3), gives us detailed additional contacts with Menander's continued popularity. Lucian, his contemporary, has imbedded in his text two of the fragments (see below, p. 126, Epitrep. fr. 7; and p. 482 [Lucian Amores*] fr. 535 κ), and his explicit reference (Pseudol. 4) to the prologues of Menander indicates, what is otherwise clear enough (e.g. Dial. Meretric. 8, 1; 9; Piscator 17; and cf. Kock on fr. 962), the presence of the Menandrian and Romans who possessed the great corpus of his unmutilated works, if due allowance for the personal equation be made, is probably not out of accord with some portions, at least, of what we now have at our disposal.

Down to the fourth or fifth century of our era Menander was read in the Nile valley and, in fact, throughout the Roman world. That he formed part of the standard literature in western Europe we know from Sidonius Apollinaris, bishop of Auvergne, 472 A.D., who draws¹ a comparison between the Epitrepontes of Menander and the Hecyra of Terence. When Menander disappeared from first-hand knowledge in Europe is uncertain. Possibly Psellus, the accomplished philologist and litterateur of the eleventh century in Constantinople, may still have had access to complete plays. His allusion, however, to "Menandreia" is suggestive rather of extensive florilegia than of the "twenty-four comedies"² unabridged, which he is said to have edited.

element in Lucian's crucible. For Alciphron (possibly contemporary with Lucian) there has been formulated the proportion—Alciphron : Menander : : Lucian : Aristophanes. From Aelian's Medley (ca. 220 A.D.) Menander may be taken "by the handful" (see Christ, *Griech. Lit. Gesch.*², § 380).

LIFE

The Attic poet Menander was born in the year 343/42 B.C. and died in 292/91 B.C.¹ His father was Diopeithes of Cephisia. When Philip crushed Greek independence at Chaeronea the boy was only five years old. At twenty-one he saw a Macedonian garrison placed on the harbour acropolis by Antipater, the successor of Alexander. In the same year Demosthenes, by a self-inflicted death, brought to a close his long struggle against Macedon, and Aristotle bequeathed to Theophrastus the headship of the Peripatetic school. As fellow-pupil with Menander

443. See also his references, passim, op. cit., to K. Sathas, Μεσαιωνική βιβλιοθήκη. The naïve mediaeval imitations of Menander and Philemon are self-evident forgeries, and the authenticity of the Rodosto catalogues of the sixteenth century, which list twenty-four comedies of Menander, is rejected by Krumbacher, op. cit. p. 509. Poulsen, however, op. cit. p. 46, accepts the Rodosto data.

A conspectus of the long list of authors and lexicons from which the fragments of Menander are culled in Kock's Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta—from Pliny the elder in the first century to Planudes in the fifteenth—might suggest, from the paucity of citations between the fifth and the ninth centuries, that wide knowledge of Menander at first hand could not be confidently assumed after the time of the Florilegium of Stobaeus (? fifth century). Suidas apparently derived his knowledge of Menander from secondary sources. (See Krumbacher, op. cit. p. 569.)

under Theophrastus was the versatile Demetrius of Phalerum, and from him, when he became the Macedonian viceroy in Athens, the handsome ¹ young poet secured official protection and participated, we are told, in the gaieties of contemporary Athenian life.

Before this Menander had been the companion-at-arms (συνέφηβος ²) of Epicurus, his junior by one year, and when he was in his "thirties" Zeno ³ the Stoic was already in Athens developing the philosophy of the Porch. Suggestions of the influence of Theophrastus ⁴ reappear now and again in Menander's character-drawing, but the impact of the creed of his companion Epicurus is obvious, and the philosophic "impassiveness" (ἀταραξία) of the Epicureans seems occasionally ⁵ tempered to an even finer edge of Stoic courage.

² For Menander's lost play, entitled Συνέφηβοι (see list infra, p. 309), cf. Kock. Com. Att. Fragm. p. 131, with Cicero's comments on Caecilius, Terence and Menander.

³ It is uncertain when Zeno began his public teaching, and the apparent echoes of Stoic doctrine in Menander yield only elusive indicia.

⁴ Le Grand, Daos, p. 324, cites six titles from the "Characters" of Theophrastus as identical with titles of Menander's plays.

⁵ See fragments infra, e.g. Nos. 247/8, p. 364; No. 481, p. 443; No. 549, p. 491; No. 556, p. 495; No. 762, p. 530; and cf. Epitrep. lines 693-697, pp. 96, 98; and Epitrep. 862-887, pp. 116, 118. (cf. Post, Dramatic Art of Menander, p. 124, on Epitr. 887 etc.)

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

Menander, however, was born to be a playwright, not a philosopher. Whatever impulse was needed may well have come from his uncle Alexis, whose long life spans the century from Aristophanes to the death of Menander and whose two hundred plays bridge easily the transition from the Old to the New Comedy. This rate of productivity was exceeded by the younger poet, who wrote more than one hundred plays in about thirty-three years.

Menander's first play, the "Self-Tormentor" (q.v. infra, p. 349), was written in his nineteenth or twentieth year,¹ and he gained his first victory with "Anger"² (infra, note p. 416) in 316/15 B.C. His activities were cut short at the age of fifty-two by drowning, it is said,³ in the harbour of Piraeus. By the road from Piraeus to Athens Pausanias saw the tomb⁴ of Menander and the cenotaph of Euripides, a juxtaposition which, perhaps, over-emphasized in

⁴ The epigram inscribed upon it is very probably the one preserved in the Greek Anthology. (See L.C.L. edition by Paton, vol. ii. p. 398, No. 370.)

tradition the real relation between the two poets. Menander was not a cenotaph of Euripides.

THE NEW COMEDY IN MENANDER

After the Macedonian conquest the Athenians, lacking the stimulus of complete political independence, turned more and more to rhetoric, to ethical philosophies, to aesthetic complacency and to the New Comedy of Manners. This New Comedy no longer offers the lyric beauty, the rapier wit, nor—as we know it¹ in Menander at least—the naked licence and the daring personal or political satire of Aristophanes. It does not, indeed, always nor only seek to provoke laughter, but is the scenic representation of human life: the pathetic, the serious, the gay, the amusing, the commonplace.

Menander's rival, Philemon, with his coarser jests, enjoyed a greater measure of popularity,² and so far overshadowed Menander's more delicate character-drawing that the latter won the prize only eight times.

The Plots.—A certain monotony¹ in the framework of the plots is the first, and, to some extent, the last impression received in studying the remains of the New Comedy. We are by repetition familiarized with the seduction or violation of a maiden; with abandoned infants; with the ultimate recognition scene, brought about by birth-tokens—rings, trinkets, vestments; reconciliation; happy marriage. But there are a thousand and one variants in developing these plots, and, as Le Grand² has pointed out, in evaluating any ancient work of art it is essential to bear in mind what the Greeks regarded as primary and not as merely secondary: “la comédie grecque n’a été ni plus ni moins monotone que la tragédie, la poésie narrative, la sculpture ou l’architecture.” Menander’s own plots, as we now know or infer them, were re-enforced and developed by side scenes and by well executed delays which led up to the dénouement through an ingenious piecemeal surrender of contributory details.

² See Le Grand, Daos, especially pp. 644 ff. This monumental and detailed study of the New Comedy may serve to fill out the necessarily inadequate observations possible in this brief sketch. Compare the English translation of the same work by James Loeb (see Bibliography below).

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

Character-Drawing.—Menander's fame is due to the delicacy and the verity of his character-drawing and his spirited dialogue.

If the framework of the plot in the New Comedy appears conventional the dramatis personae, the types of character presented, are standardized almost like the familiar pieces on a chess-board. But the pieces are numerous: the cook, physician, diviner or mendicant priest, philosopher, confidante (female or male), banker, usurer, merchant, lover, the intervening father, facetious or grandiloquent slaves, courtesans, old nurses and their mistresses, the major-domo, parasite, soldier, farmer, seafarer—the interest centres on the combinations possible in the ordinary game of life, and the more skilful poet best plays his pieces—knight, bishop, and pawn—so as to avoid a stalemate at the end.

Menander's "mirror of life"—his traditional meed of praise—reflected, without needless refraction, contemporary life. But contemporary Athens had fallen on evil days. The "passing show"¹ that crossed his mirror was a tamed menagerie; the political and social atmosphere was no longer vibrant either with victory or with struggle. Yet Menander's characters are no mere marionettes. Many¹ of his characters live in the memory and emerge from their conventional types. The sordid is relieved by elements of generosity and unselfishness and by romantic love,² to which Ovid bears testimony while perhaps appreciating its quality only imperfectly. Menander's artistic fidelity to Life secured his posthumous fame.

Prologue.—The wooden device of the isolated prologue, conventionalized by Euripides, was shrewdly adapted by Menander, who postponed³ it until after the audience had been won⁴ by dramatic dialogue. Whether Menander, and others, regularly made use of a postponed prologue is, at present, only a matter of inference.

¹ e.g. Abrotonon in the Arbitrants; cf. Capps, Edit. of Menander, p. 30 et passim. See also Le Grand, op. cit. pp. 232–3, on the character-drawing of Davus; also Post, op. cit. p. 141.

³ cf. infra, p. 203, Periceir.; p. 297, fragm. 1 of The Hero; and p. 489, fragm. No. 545. M. was not the only one to use this device; cf. C. H. Moore (C.P. xi. 1–10, on the fragm. incert. P.S.I. 126), who adds Τύχη Προλογίζουσα to some twenty such personifications known from the New Comedy, and examines their prototypes in Greek Tragedy. See also Le Grand, op. cit. 508–524; Post, op. cit. pp. 127–131.

⁴ Post, op. cit. p. 131.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

Chorus.—The “chorus”¹ noted here and there in the MSS. as a stage direction marks off the quasi-“acts.”² No actual words are transmitted. Innovations, perhaps begun by Agathon, resulted, in the New Comedy, in a “Comus” performance probably accompanied by song and dance and given by groups of persons sometimes to be identified by words of the actors before or after the performance.

GREEK VOCABULARY AND STYLE³

Menander's choice of words and expressions, whether in dialogue or monologue,⁴ is eminently

¹ See Flickinger, “Χοροὶ in Terence's Heauton, the shifting of Choral Rôles in Menander, and Agathon's Embolima,” C.P. .vii. 1 (1912). Also in Hermes, vol. 43 (1908), two articles by A. Körte, two by Fr. Leo, and one by O. Immisch. Also see Loeb (trans. of Le Grand's Daos), “New Comedy,” pp. 336-39, 367-70, and Croiset, “Litter. Grecque,” iii. p. 610. See also Menander's own sententious reference to the “Mutes in Life's Chorus,” infra, p. 353.

² Le Grand, op. cit. p. 465.

³ cf. Durham, “Vocabulary of Menander” (see Bibliography); Croiset, “Style of Menander” (Hellenic Herald, July, 1909, trans. from Revue des Deux Mondes); also the analysis in Le Grand, op. cit. pp. 325-344. The free use of asyndeton, for example, is obviously suited to the spoken word; tragic colouring, on occasion, is certainly a self-explanatory device; and Menander's traditional “sententiousness”—the κομβολόγιον of apothegms—fits normally into the context discovered. The language was entering the penumbra of the κοινή (e.g. οὐθέν, γίνομαι, etc.), but the Attic light is not yet eclipsed. (cf. Croiset, “Le Dernier des Attiques—Ménandre,” Revue des Deux Mondes, vol. 50.)

⁴ See Le Grand, op. cit. p. 550.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

suitable to the matter in hand, his diction being usually of great clarity, his realism, while avoiding unnecessary vulgarity, adapted to the characters, whether slave or master. His vocabulary is dictated by contemporary, not traditional, Attic Greek.

SOURCES AND LEGATEES

The patent familiarity of Menander with Euripides¹ must not be allowed to obscure his contacts with the other great writers of Tragedy, nor with Aristophanes himself, whose fervid vigour still crops out in Menander although "in Plautus and Terence the lineaments of this kinship have been effaced . . . Even if the New Comedy is the adoptive child of the Tragedy of Euripides its mother was, after all, the Old Comedy."² But even less must we forget that the main source of Menander's vitality was Life³ itself—the daily life in Athens.

² Fr. Leo, "Der neue Menander," Hermes, 43 (see context).

³ See H. W. Prescott (op. cit. supra, p. xviii, note 2) and, inter alia, his suggestion of the influence of the Sicilian-Attic type of comedy (C.P. 13, p. 118). With this might be compared the double herm, thought by Poulsen (op. cit. p. 43) to be Menander and Epicharmus (?).

⁴ e.g. Atilius, Caecilius, Afranius, Luscus, Plautus, Terence, Turpilus (Christ, *Griech. Litt. Gesch.*⁵, p. 373).

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

to the telescoping of plots or free selection of material—is a problem to which many¹ writers have given detailed attention. Terence, four² of whose six extant plays are frankly attributed to the Greek of Menander, seems to offer the best points of contact. In at least three comedies Terence made use of “contaminatio” of plots or even blending of the material, but, as fortune has preserved no one of these Menandrian plays, we are still unable to estimate the exact meaning, and justice, of Caesar’s apostrophe (see above, p. x, note 3) and whether the alleged lack of “vis comica” in Terence means lack of inventiveness³ in the necessary re-making of material to suit the exigencies of the Roman theatre. Meanwhile Terence’s beauty of diction and vivid charm remain unimpeached.

² The Hecyra, although also attributed in the Didascalia to the Greek of Menander, is apparently derived more nearly from Apollodorus. See Lefebvre, Méandre, ed. princeps, pp. 31–33 (1907), for comparison of the Hecyra and Epitrep.; see also Lafaye, infra, Bibliography. See below, p. 353, The Heiress, with reference to the Phormio of Terence.

³ That Caesar was not implying a lack in Terence of καθημερινόν seems evident.

EXTANT WRITINGS

From the plays of Menander, probably aggregating when complete more than 100,000 lines, we possess to-day (exclusive of the 758 gnostic verses loosely attributed¹ to Menander and of numerous fragmentary words preserved in citations) only some 4,000 lines. We know these from the following sources²:—

1. The Cairo papyrus, discovered in Egypt in 1905, contains portions of five comedies and some minor fragments as yet unidentified. Although no one play is complete, yet, in the case of three of them, continuous scenes are preserved and the main outlines of the plots, with many details, may be followed or inferred. For one of these plays, the Periceiomene, two MSS.—the Leipzig and the Heidelberg—partly duplicate, partly supplement the Cairo text, and a third MS., Ox. pap. vol. ii., adds 51 lines near the end of the play.

2. A series of other discoveries of new fragments and the identification of material existing in various collections have enlarged our knowledge of seven or, possibly, eight of the plays already known. There are: 125 lines of the Georgos (Egypt, 1907, now in Geneva); 118 lines of the Colax; 23 lines of the Perinthia; and 40 lines (much broken) of the Misoumenos, published from 1903–1910 in vols. iii. vi. and vii. respectively of the Oxyrhynchus papyri; ³ 101 lines (some 34 reasonably complete) of the Citharistes, Berlin Klassikertexte, Heft v. 2, 1907; 20 lines of the Coneiazomenae in the library of Dorpat, identified by Zureteli and published by Körte (1910); certain fragments in St. Petersburg containing 56

³ To these must be added now (1920–21) a fragm. of 27 broken lines and a few verse-ends, published in Ox. pap. vol. xiii. No. 1605. The word Θρασωρίς in col. ii. 25 seems to identify this fragm. with the Misoumenos.

EXTANT WRITINGS

lines of the Phasma, identified by Jernstedt and included in Körte's edition, and two other fragments here included in the Epitrepontes (see below, p. 10) but printed by Körte as Unidentified Comedy No. II., and one other fragment assigned to the Canephorus; and, finally, an important fragment of the Epitrep. published in 1914, Ox. pap. vol. x. No. 1236 (see below, p. 12).

3. Two other finds may be mentioned here, although not accepted in this edition: (a) in the papyri from Ghorân (see Körte, Hermes, 43, p. 48) an attempt has been made to identify certain fragments with the Ἀριστος of Menander. This is rejected both by Körte, op. cit., and by Le Grand, op. cit. p. 222. (b) In the Papiri Greci e Latini, vol. ii. (P.S.I. 126), is published Frammenti di una Comedia di Menandro. Körte (N. Jhrb. 39, 1917) accepts this as written by Menander.

4. In Kock's Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta (with Demianczuk's Supplementum Comicum) are edited from various sources: (a) about 1,000 lines under 90 titles actually identified, including those already mentioned, and (b) more than 800 lines from unidentified plays, together with 169 others which have been attributed with doubt to Menander.

In this edition the material from (1) and (2) is included, being equivalent to what is found in the second Teubner edition (plus the Ox. pap. fragment No. 1236) or in the second edition of Sudhaus. In addition there are here given the most significant fragments from sixty-seven of the other identified plays, and also more than two hundred of the unidentified fragments, aggregating 612 lines. Although these minor fragments, with a few exceptions, can give little suggestion as to plot-entanglement, they still remain of essential value in our estimate of Menander's ethical quality and in their reflection of contemporary life.

THE TEXT

For the material in the Cairo papyrus the text reflects primarily Lefebvre's second (1911) edition, facsimile and apograph, which superseded the editio princeps. Many changes, however, due to independent examinations of the papyrus by Jensen and by Sudhaus, have been accepted in whole or in part. A multitude of corrections or supplements made by other commentators, including Körte and Sudhaus in their respective second editions, with some by the present editor, have been incorporated or modified. For the first four plays a comparison with the edition by Capps (1910) will show continuous indebtedness to him where subsequent knowledge has not entailed changes. In addition his stage directions have often been incorporated with little or no change.

For the text of the other recently discovered fragments there have been chiefly used the second editions of Körte and Sudhaus respectively, Grenfell and Hunt's Georgos, the Oxyrhynchus papyri, and Kretschmar (for the Georgos, Colax, and Phasma).

For the other minor fragments the text has been based upon Kock's Comic. Attic. Fragm. (collated with Meineke, Dübner, Reitzenstein) and Demianczuk's Supplem. Comicum.

Supplements in the text are indicated by half-brackets, \lceil , superior to the line. Conjectural insertions are indicated by angular brackets, $\langle \rangle$, and, in the translation, assumed context is indicated by brackets. The paragraphus, —, indicating in the MSS. a change of speaker, is inserted under each line where its presence is certain. In broken portions of the text the double point, (:), also indicating, in the MSS., a change of speaker (or, rarely, self-address), has been occasionally retained where the new speaker could not be designated.

The critical notes tacitly assume a few obvious corrections of the apograph and also, where no further discussion is now necessary, the mass¹ of corrections, supplements, or emendations already recorded in the critical apparatus of Capps, of van Leeuwen, of Körte², of Sudhaus², of Grenfell and Hunt, etc. Subsequent additions or changes are referred to the proper source, when known.

THE ARBITRANTS

THE ARBITRANTS¹

INTRODUCTION

I

THE Epitrepontes, or "Those Who Submit their Case to Arbitration," is the most complete of the five plays partially preserved in the Cairo papyrus. Alciphron² cites this comedy among the chefs-d'œuvre of Menander, and Quintilian³ mentions it with five others, now known only by meagre fragments, when he speaks of Menander as a model in matter and manner for the young Roman orators. "He alone," continues Quintilian, "in my judgment, if read with diligence would suffice to secure all the qualities which we are inculcating; so completely has he mirrored human life, . . . so aptly does he conform to every circumstance, character and mood." The Arbitration scene of Act II, with which the mutilated papyrus begins, is only one incident in the play, but it reflects so perfectly these qualities of Menander that it is not surprising that the poet drew the title from it.

The list of dramatis personae, the argument, the whole of the first "Act" (with two exceptions noted below), considerable portions within the play, and some lines at the end have been lost. Important details in regard to the plot and the characters are uncertain and some of them are likely to remain subjects for ingenious controversy, but the resultant impression, in spite of mutilation, is that of an artistic whole.¹

The plot is as follows. At the women's night festival of Tauropolia, in the course of the year preceding the opening of the play, Pamphila, daughter of Smicrines, had been violated by Charisius, a well-to-do young man. The girl retained the ring of her betrayer but no recollection of his face. The two, meeting afterwards as strangers, are married and are living happily in an Attic country deme, probably Acharnae, when a child is born to Pamphila which she, with the help of her old nurse, Sophrona, causes to be exposed, apparently among the foot-hills of Mount Parnes, together with certain birth-tokens, including the ring of the unknown father. Charisius is informed of the circumstance by his eavesdropping slave, Onesimus. Being much in love with his wife he is unwilling to divorce her but refuses to live with her. He gives himself up to revellings with boon companions and the harp-girl, Abrotonon. With a reference to this situation the play apparently begins.² An unidentified character, possibly a public caterer, is cross-questioning Onesimus about the somewhat strained domestic relations within. The remainder of this dialogue, now lost, and the other missing scenes of Act I, doubtless developed the situation and put the audience in possession of the facts necessary to an understanding of the subsequent action.¹

¹ Of all the extant material this play offers the best chance to appraise Menander. Also the reconstruction of its plot and text requires the most discussion. Hence the space accorded to it in this volume. This must serve in lieu of details necessarily omitted in the general and special introductions for lack of space. See M. Croiset, Menandre, L'Arbitrage, 1908, pp. 2 ff. for an admirable evaluation of this play.

INTRODUCTION

When we are able² again to pick up the thread, at about thirty-five lines before the end of Act I, the father of Pamphila, the close-fisted and irascible Smicrines, has arrived upon the scene. He has come to investigate and to discuss with his daughter rumours current about his son-in-law's dissipated life. He is full of resentment and alarm at the misuse of the dowry money. He has, perhaps, already a germinating thought of getting it back again by means of a divorce. But neither the true nor the garbled story of the birth of a baby is as yet known to him.

After Onesimus's monologue at the opening of Act II, Smicrines probably emerges from his interview with Pamphila and is on his way back to Athens, when he becomes, incidentally and unwittingly, the arbitrator over the fate of his own grandchild. Thus the audience is skilfully put in possession of the irony of the situation and can welcome with an especial relish the subsequent appearances of the angry or perplexed Smicrines, who forms a real pièce de resistance up to the very end.

The Arbitration scene, which is preserved intact,³ opens in the midst of a dispute between a shepherd and a charcoal-man. The abruptness of the opening is only apparent, so as to give the desired realistic touch of speakers coming suddenly within earshot. All essential details come out naturally.

³ This is the beginning of the Cairo papyrus, as preserved, and with it begins the actual numbering of the lines in this edition.

INTRODUCTION

The foundling child, recently exposed by Pamphila, has been discovered by the shepherd, Davus. Unwilling to rear it himself he has given it, upon request, to Syriscus, a charcoal-burner,¹ whose wife had lost her own baby. The birth-tokens Davus retained himself. Syriscus, learning this, now demands them of him. Davus refuses to give them up. They appeal to a dignified gentleman, Smicrines as it happens, who now appears on the scene, and ask him to arbitrate their quarrel. Smicrines decides that the birth-tokens, along with the foundling, go to the care of the foster parents. Syriscus and his wife, with the baby, are on the way to the house of Chaerestratus to pay him, as landlord, their tithes. As they pause in front of the houses to go over the newly rescued birth-tokens, Onesimus comes up and recognises among the trinkets the lost ring of his master, Charisius. This ring, through the clever assistance of Abrotonon, who had been in attendance upon the women at the Tauropolia festival, leads ultimately to the happy discovery that Charisius is himself the father of the child. In Act III, lines 202-363, Abrotonon's vivacious narration of the Tauropolia episode; her rapid planning of an audacious but benevolent trick upon Charisius; and the dialogue with Onesimus leave nothing to be desired on the score of realism. Of the next 130 lines, to the end of Act III, only fragmentary suggestions are preserved, but at least thus much seems clear;¹ Smicrines has again returned, determined to take back home the dowry and his daughter. He hears that a child has been born to Charisius and the harp-girl. He knows nothing of Pamphila's own affair. There follow: a mutilated soliloquy by Smicrines; one by the Cook; and various dialogues including that with the young friends of Charisius who vainly strive to appease and to divert the old man's indignation against his son-in-law.

INTRODUCTION

Smicrines goes into the house determined to overbear all opposition on the part of Pamphila to a formal separation from her husband.

At the beginning of Act IV² Smicrines is making clear to Pamphila, with such patience as he is capable of, the impossible situation for a wife whose husband keeps up a "double establishment." Pamphila, conscious of her own history, persists in her loyal devotion to her husband. Charisius, as we learn at line 669, overhears this conversation. Smicrines (in the missing lines) goes off once more, baffled.

In the remainder of Act IV, partly well-preserved and partly restored by the lucky find of another papyrus fragment,³ we have two recognition scenes, with vivid dialogue and narrations, in which Pamphila and, later, Charisius himself discover the real truth. This heals all their trouble.

² The placing of this fragment here and its interpretation are due to Professor Harmon's ingenious and convincing proof, see below, page 12.

INTRODUCTION

In Act V, of which the first portions are missing or mutilated, we can at least identify¹ a scene involving the emancipation of Onesimus and the purchase and emancipation of the astute and beneficent Abrotonon; we may infer a lost scene in which the kindly Syricus and his wife are rewarded for their jealous care of the child's interests; and we have, practically intact, the final dénouement in which old Smicrines, last of all, is allowed, after malicious baiting by Onesimus and Sophrona, to learn the truth. When the Cairo manuscript finally breaks off we are evidently very near the end.

Apart from the breaks due to the fragmentary transmission of the text, the transparent plot needs no elaborate elucidation. Menander, as is his wont, leads up to the romance of love within the marriage bond.² He holds his mirror to contemporary life but contrives to reflect far more of good than of evil. Charisius commits one outrageous act, represented as alien to his character when sober. He is generous to his wife when he learns of her misfortune and of her deception in marrying him without a confession. He "hates the gay life" in which he tries to drown his continued love for Pamphila. When he hears from Abrotonon her cunningly distorted tale he rejects the usual plea of masculine immunity from blame and holds that his own crime far outdistances his wife's innocent misfortune.

² cf. Plutarch, Quaest. Conv. vii. 3.

INTRODUCTION

unnatural concealment of her misadventure, is loyal to her husband when the uncomfortable results of his real transgression bear most heavily upon him. Both are rewarded for their rightmindedness.

The harp-girl, Abrotonon, though canny enough in her own interest, is "honest" and generous-minded. The sterling goodness of Syriscus, the charcoal-man, might convert coals into diamonds. Davus is the only villain in the play, as preserved, and swift retribution overtakes his contemptible willingness to defraud the baby of his chance of a "recognition."

Even the close-fisted and crusty old Smicrines betrays his innate sense of justice by his indignant verdict against Davus. Nor does the mere fact that his anxiety is apparently greater concerning the dowry than for his daughter's happiness exclude a belief in his paternal affection, made evident, indeed, by the gift of a generous marriage portion in the first place. He passes, as is just, through an intermittent Purgatory of hostility and baiting to emerge, as is not unjust, at the end of the play, into the serene Paradise of a happy grandfather. He is an admirable tertium quid to unify both the action of the play itself and the complex motives in human character.¹

¹ It is not practicable to reckon an exact number of lines for the missing first Act, but it may be assumed that at least 210 lines preceded D¹. Assuming therefore some 35 lines as lost at the end of the play, the total length would be at least 1164 lines (or 1225, see below). (Sudhaus, ed², assumes 1305.) In Capps's edition the numbers for D¹-C⁴ and for H¹⁻² and H³⁻⁴ are the same as in this edition.

INTRODUCTION

The delimitation into the conventional five "acts" is now possible, three of the four appearances of the chorus being identified and the fourth placed with reasonable certainty. The length of Act I is wholly inferential, that of Act II and Act V may be conjectured approximately. This would give a normal average length for the acts, as follows:

Act I	circa 200 \pm lines
Act II (begun on St. Pet. verso) (x)
+ 201 lines	" 260 \pm "
Act III (settled in Cairo text) 202-497	297 "
Act IV (beginning, as assumed, with Z ¹)
498-764	268 "
Act V begins in β^2 765 to 919 + (x)	circa 200 \pm "
	Total 1225 \pm lines

THE TEXT AS HERE RECONSTRUCTED.

The reconstruction of this mosaic-like text from the fragments listed in the preceding conspectus is the outcome of long and critical examination and discussion by many scholars in England, France, Germany, and the United States. There has been progress from possibility to probability, and, in some cases, from error to certainty.

The order adopted in the present text differs in some respects from that of all preceding editions. Certainty at all points cannot be arrived at unless some further discovery throws new light on what is now doubtful. The following memoranda will indicate that the arrangement is not, with possibly one exception (i.e. U¹ and U²), an arbitrary one.

1. The short fragment, No. 600 in Kock's fragmenta adespota, is referred to the opening of the play by a general consensus of opinion.

2. The St. Petersburg fragments, from their content, are to be referred to this play with confidence. About their position there has been much controversy. The history of their discovery is given by Professor Edward Capps, Four Plays of Menander (1910), pp. 34-35, who was the first to recognize that the recto belonged to this play and who placed the fragments at Act III-IV. The allusion, lines 33-35, just before the entry of the Chorus, seemed, with other indicia, to point to an advanced state of the action. The verso only was at first included by Van Leeuwen (ed. 1908) and placed at Act I-II. Croiset (Revue des études grecques, 1908) favoured the insertion later in the play. Miss I. Kapp (Hermes, xlvii. 317-319) argued for the position Act I-II, and Sudhaus (Hermes, xlviii. 15 ff.) likewise approved of this position which he adopts in his second (1914) edition, prefixing also fragm. Z¹⁻² (for which, see below). Körte, in the second Teubner edition (1912), excludes the fragments, for reasons rehearsed pp. xxi ff., while admitting that much of the matter is germane to the play.

The earlier position in the play is here adopted because there seems to be no suggestion in these lines that Smicrines knew of the birth of a son to Charisius, not even the garbled story of Abrotonon. His general indignation against Charisius seems consistent with his feelings at a first visit to Pamphila. On the other hand allusions in the fragments VX and YR would seem to make the matter in the St. Petersburg fragments inadequate if placed after these fragments (for which see below).

3. Fragments NTM¹+VX¹ and NTM²+VX². The liaison between NTM and VX was already contemplated and tested by M. Lefebvre who discusses it in the facsimile edition of 1911 (Introd. pp. x-xiii). After long hesitation, however, he rejected the combination. Professor Carl Robert (1912, Sitzungber. der königl. preuss. Acad. der Wiss. xxii.) revised the scheme with a slight difference: viz., he raised up fragment VX¹ one line so that the first verse-end, -δη, on the right, comes opposite εὐθὺς the fourth, instead of the fifth, verse-end of fragm. M¹, on the left, etc. The meagre verse-ends thus rearranged Robert filled out with conjectural matter including two proper names (one of these, Moschion, not mentioned in the extant fragments, is a "delegate-at-large" from other plays of Menander and the New Comedy).

After much hesitation the present editor has adopted Robert's arrangement as being more probable than any other combination (noting especially what M. Lefebvre, l.c., has to say about "les caractères extrinsèques"). This does not involve, however, the acceptance of Professor Robert's ingenious and over-subtle conjectural restorations, but, with the fragments YR¹⁻³ following closely, it does preempt the position to which Professor Capps, with great probability at the time (1910), referred the St. Petersburg fragments.

4. Fragments Z^{1,2}. The placing of these small, but interesting fragments at the beginning of Act IV is due to Professor Harmon's keen insight. The character on the margin of Frag. Z¹ he interprets, not as a page number, 6, but as a quaternion signature, this quaternion, Z, being the sixth in the codex according to Körte's arrangement. The internal evidence of the fragments is even more convincing. Smicrines is urging upon his daughter the plight of a wife whose husband keeps up a "double establishment" (cf. δfs). It must therefore be placed after Smicrines has been told the trumped-up story of Abrotonon's child. It would, therefore, be utterly out of place in Act I where Sudhaus prefixes it to the St. Petersburg fragments.

5. Fragment No. 1236 of Oxyrhynchus Papyri, vol. x. (1914). This unexpected find has contributed in three particulars to greater certainty in the interpretation of the text. First: the recto duplicates the Cairo pap. lines 285-406 (=665-686 of this edition), confirming or modifying one or two doubtful verse-ends. Second: the verso contains some twenty-one verses of which about one half are new and give several clues to the speakers. Third: the other half of these verses overlaps a portion of the mutilated fragments, Cairo β¹⁻⁴, hitherto conjecturally assigned (see Körte², pp. 93, 94) to the Periceïromene because of the marginal designations of speakers taken by Lefebvre to indicate "Polemon" of that play. As it is now certain that these fragments, β¹⁻⁴, belong to the Epitrepontes, other readings of these letters now seem probable (see note on text of 729). As the recto of Ox. No. 1236 coincides with lines 385-406 of the Cairo papyrus, its verso might be assigned to either one of the lacunae which precede and follow respectively at a convenient distance. The context, however, shows that it follows and, by overlapping β¹, proves that the parts of this latter fragment follow in the order: β¹⁻²⁻³⁻⁴. Moreover β² contains the break and indication of a Chorus; consequently we have the beginning of Act IV, now made definitive just about where (764) it had been previously assumed by Capps, Robert and others. Finally, the fragments β¹ and Q²; β² and Q¹ may be combined by virtue of the contexts and seem capable of physical union also.

INTRODUCTION

6. Fragments U^1 and U^2 . The placing of these small but important fragments has caused much controversy. In the second Teubner edition (1912) the order: H^2 ; $-U^2$; $-Q^2$; $-U^1$; $-Q^1$ could still be accepted with confidence. The discovery of Oxyr. pap. No. 1236 and the consequent addition of β^1 -4 made this impossible. Various combinations, including physical union, of $\beta^1 + U^2$ and $\beta^2 + U^1$ at once suggested themselves to different scholars independently. Robert, in Hermes, xlix. 3 "Das Oxyrhynchosblatt der Epitrepontes" published his combination and confident conjectural reconstruction with, apparently, insufficient regard to the physical obstructions to the union. His scheme and further hypothetical combinations are tested (with a phototype reproduction) and rejected in A.J.P. vol. xxxvi. 2, pp. 185-202 (F. G. Allinson: "Menander's Epitrepontes Revised by the New Oxyrhyncus Fragment"). The tentative arrangement adopted in the present edition offers, it is believed, a plausible context without any mechanical difficulties. Sudhaus, who died before his second edition was completed, left U^1 and U^2 outside of the consecutive text. They are there printed at the end.

Note to 2, p. 10.—The probable decipherment of $\Sigma\mu\kappa\rho/$, in margin of St. Petersburg fragment (made by Hutloff and others), is contributory evidence to the identification with this play.

(later SIMMIAS?)

(Smicr nes, father of Pamphila, coming from the city, is soliloquizing about the reports which have reached him in regard to the dissolute life which his son-in-law, Charisius, is leading. The project of inducing his daughter to separate from her husband is already forming in his mind. It is with the financial side of the situation that he seems to be chiefly occupied at this first visit to Pamphila.)

Looks he so glum, the thrice unfortunate? . . .

(In the broken lines Chaerestratus apparently first gives Simmias some idea of the situation, explaining Smicrines's indignation at his son-in-law. There is allusion to a "harp-girl" (19). After these asides Chaerestratus, in the lacuna of some 15 lines, has apparently addressed himself to attempting to mollify the angry father-in-law, and when the text, on the other side of the St. Petersburg fragment, begins again, he is, it may be inferred, concluding his exhortation to Smicrines by calling down a blessing conditioned on his leniency to Charisius. This, however, has no immediate effect on the old man, who presently goes in to his daughter.)

For me,—as my thought goes,—one's master is at once
City and refuge and the code of law and judge
In all of what is right and wrong. I've got to live
According to his views alone. But that old man,

Onesimus may then have animadverted upon his own officiousness in informing Charisius about Pamphila's previous misfortune, and may have continued to speculate on the crisis in family affairs which the old man's intervention is likely to superinduce.

Exit Onesimus into the house of Chaerestratus.

Enter Smicrines from the house of Charisius. He comes upon Syriacus and Davus engaged (beginning of Cairo papyrus) in the dispute over the birth-tokens belonging to the foundling. By comic irony he becomes, unknown to himself, arbitrator over the fate of his own grandson.)

SMICRINES

Give you ? And wherefore ?

SYRISCUS

We've a question in dispute.

SMICRINES

What's that to me, pray ?

SYRISCUS

Some impartial judge for this
We're seeking now, and so, if nothing hinders you,
Adjust our quarrel.

I took him up and with him went off to my house,
I had in mind to rear him—'twas my notion then—
But over night came counsel, as it does to all,
And with myself I reasoned : " What have I to do
With rearing children and the trouble ? Where shall I Find so much money ? Why take on anxieties ?"
Thus minded was I. Back unto my flock again
At daybreak. Came this fellow—he's a charcoal-man—

Unto this selfsame place to saw out tree-stumps there.
Now he had had acquaintance with me heretofore,
And so we fell to talking. Noticing my gloom Says he, " Why's Davus anxious ? " " Now why not ? " says I,

" For I'm a meddler. " And I tell him of the facts ;
How I had found, how owned the child. And straightway then,
Ere I could tell him everything, he begged and begged ;

" So, Davus, blessed be your lot ! " at every word Exclaiming. Then : " Give me the baby ! So, good luck

Well, off he went.
Just now he meets me with his wife, and suddenly
Lays claim to all the things then with the child

(Now these were small and worthless, merely nothing)
—claims

That he should have them ; says he's treated scurvily
Because I will not give them, claim them for myself.
But I declare he'd better feel some gratitude
For what he did get by his begging. If I fail

(to Syriscus)

Although you were not by, do you, I say, expect
To have it all yourself, and not one thing for me?
In fine, I gave you of my own with all good will:
If this still pleases you, then keep it even now,
But if it doesn't suit and if you've changed your mind,
Why, then return it. Don't commit nor suffer wrong.
But 'twere not fair that you get all, by my consent
In part, and, partly, forcing me. I've said my say.

SYRISCUS

Has said his say?

SMICRINES

You're deaf? He's said his say.

All right,

Then I come after. All alone this fellow found
The baby. Yes, and all of this he's telling now
He tells correctly, father, and it happened so.
I do not contradict. I did entreat and beg
And I received it from him. Yes, he tells the truth.
A certain shepherd, fellow labourer of his,
With whom he had been talking, then brought word to me

That with the baby he had found some ornaments.
To claim these things, see, father, he is here himself!
Give me the baby, wife.

He's asking back the necklace and birth-tokens too,

For he declares that these were placed upon himself
For his adorning, not for eking out your keep.
I too join in, and ask for them, as guardian—
On giving him you made me that. (To Smicrines) And now, good sir,
Methinks 'tis yours to settle whether it be right
These golden trinkets and whatever else there be,
As given by his mother, whosoe'er she was,
Be put by for the baby till he come of age,
Or this footpad who stripped him is to have these things,
That others own, provided that he found them first !
“Why didn't I,” you'll say, “when first I took the child,
Demand them then of you ?” It was not then as yet
Within my power to speak thus in the child's behalf,
And even now I'm here demanding no one thing
That's mine, mine only. “Windfall ! Share-all !”
None of that !
No “finding” when 'tis question of a person wronged.
That is not “finding,” nay, but outright filching that !
And look at this too, father. Maybe this boy here
Was born above our station. Reared 'mongst working-folk
He will despise our doings, his own level seek
And venture on some action suiting noble birth :
Will go a-lion-hunting ; carry arms ; or run
A race at games. You've seen the actors act, I know,
And all of this you understand. Those heroes once,
Pelias, Neleus, by an aged man were found,
A goatherd in his goatskin dressed as I am now,
And, when he noticed they were better born than he,
He tells the matter, how he found, how took them up,
He gave them back their wallet, with birth-tokens filled.

THE ARBITRANTS

And thus they found out clearly all their history,
And they, the one-time goatherds, afterwards were kings.

But had a Davus found those things and sold them off,
That he might profit by twelve drachmas¹ for himself,
Through all the coming ages they had been unknown
Who were such great ones and of such a pedigree.

And 'so it is not fitting, father, that I here
Should rear his body and that Davus seize meanwhile
His life's hope for the future, make it disappear.

A youth about to wed his sister once was stopped
By just such tokens. One a mother found and saved,
And one a brother. Since, O father, all men's lives
Are liable to dangers, we must watch, look out,
With forethought far ahead for what is possible.

"Well, if you are not suited, give him back," says he.
This is his stronghold in the matter, as he thinks.

But that's not just. If you must give up what is his,
Then in addition do you claim to have the child
That more securely you may play the rogue again
If some of his belongings Fortune has preserved?

I've said my say. (To Smicrines) Give verdict as you hold is just.

SMICRINES

Well, this decision's easy: "All that was exposed Together with the child goes with him," I decide.

DAVUS

All right. But now, the child?

SMICRINES

By Zeus, I won't decide
He's yours who wrong him, but he's his who came to aid,
This man's, who stood against you, you who'd injure him.

This one's a gilded ring without ; inside It's iron. On the seal is carved—a bull ?—or goat ? I can't tell which, and one Cleostratus is he Who made it—so the letters say.

"May Zeus bring wretched ruin on the wretched man Who told me that !" If he should make up with his

As like as not he'd seize and make away with me
Because I told the tale and know of it. 'Twas well
I kept from stirring up some other mess with this,

I must be off.

ONESIMUS

The matter stands, my man, like this.
The ring here is my master's,—I am certain sure—
Charisius's, but to him I hesitate
To show it, for 'twere much the same as to declare
Him father of the child with whom the ring was found.

SYRISCUS

Why so, you fool?

'Twas at the Tauropolia,¹
The all-night women's festival, he lost it once.
'Twould seem that it's a question of a maiden wronged,
That she gave birth to and of course exposed this child.
If someone now could find her and produce this ring,
He'd make clear demonstration. But, as matters stand,
'Twould merely mean suspicion and confusion too.

SYRISCUS

See you to that yourself. But if you make this stir,
Wishing that I take back the ring and give to you
A little something, that is folly. For with me
There's no "divide."

ONESIMUS

Nor do I wish it.

Well, all right.

When I've run here and yonder—for I'm off to town—
I'll come again to know of this, what we're to do.

[Exit Syricus towards Athens. Abrotonon comes up to Onesimus.]

ABROTONON

Was it this charcoal-man, Onesimus, who found
The baby boy the woman's nursing now indoors?

ONESIMUS

Yes, so he says.

ABROTONON

O what a dainty child, poor thing !

ONESIMUS

And this ring here was on him. 'Tis my master's ring.

ABROTONON

Fie, luckless, fie ! If, then, it's your young master's child

For certain, will you see it brought up like a slave ?
You ought to die. 'Twould serve you right !

ONESIMUS

'Tis as I say,

Its mother no one knows.

ABROTONON

He lost the ring, you say,
During the feast of Tauropolia ?

ONESIMUS

Yes, he

Was in his cups—at least, the slave attending him
Informed me so.

THE ARBITRANTS

ABROTONON

Of course ! And then alone he came
Upon the women as they made a night of it.
I know, for once just such a thing as this occurred
When I was by.

ONESIMUS

When you were by ?

ABROTONON

Why yes, last year
At Tauropolia. For maids I thrummed the lute
And I myself played with them. Then—that is—not yet
Had I had knowledge of man's way and what it is—That's true as true, by Aphrodite !

ONESIMUS

But the girl ?

Who was she ? Can you tell me that ?

ABROTONON

I could inquire.

She was the women's friend, the women whom I served.

ONESIMUS

And who's her father ? Heard you that ?

ABROTONON

Nay, I know naught

Except I'd know her if I once caught sight of her.
A handsome girl, ye gods ! and she's a wealthy one,
They said.

It may be she's the one.

Ye gods, diaphanous!—was ruined utterly,
For it was all in tatters.

For I'll not try to cheat you.

ONESIMUS

Well, what now am I

ABROTONON

Look you here! If you have sense
And will obey me, you will make this matter clear
And tell your master. If the baby's mother be A free-born girl, what need to keep him in the dark
About the circumstances?

ONESIMUS

Well, Abrotonon,

First thing of all now let's discover who she is.
And so, with this in view, I want you to—

And so have given it. When men are in their cups
No end of things like that are apt to come about.
But till I know who wronged her I'll not search for her
Nor even tell a word of this.

That's not half bad.

But what is one to do?

For, thinking you the mother of his child, of course
He'll buy your freedom instantly.

ABROTONON

I wish he might,

But I don't know.

ONESIMUS

Ah, don't you though? At any rate,
Abrotonon, are no thanks due to me for this?

ABROTONON

By the Twain Goddesses, of course. All this my luck
At least I'll give you credit for.

ONESIMUS

Then here's a point :
What if on purpose you stop looking for the girl,
Ignore the matter, and go back on me?

ABROTONON

You fool !

Why should I? Daft on babies am I, do you think?
May I but merely get my liberty! O gods,
May I get that as wage for this!

Shall be a slave forever. But from her, perhaps,
I'll get some gain if she succeeds. That's only fair!—
What groundless reckonings—misguided me—to hope
To get back thanks from woman! Only heaven send
I don't get mischief new! Now Mistress's affairs
Are ticklish—on the brink. For if the girl is found To be of free-born father and turns out to be
This baby's mother, her he'll take, his wife divorce.
Right well I know: "Desert a sinking ship!"¹

Here too methinks I've dodged, and neatly too, all charge

Of this mess being stirred by me. Goodbye, I say,
To playing meddler in affairs of other folks.
And if again you catch me putting in my oar
Or chattering, I'll give you leave and liberty
To cut my—molars out!

(Sees Smicrines approaching from the city.)

I say! Whom have we here
Approaching? It is Smicrines come back from town.
He's all wrought up again. From someone he has learned

The truth perhaps. I think I'll make off quick and shun

All complication, for I ought to find out first
About Abrotonon and how she's coming on.

(At line 388 the Cook seems to be speaking. He seems to be incensed about something in regard to the luncheon that he has served. He will never again submit his culinary skill to such lack of appreciation. Smicrines stands aside and, listening, obtains additional, misleading, information.)

THE ARBITRANTS

At line 413 Simmias, friend of Charisius, is present and exclaims: "Good Heracles . . . !"

In the broken lines 414-448 and 463-483, including the better preserved lines 438 ff., it is hazardous to assign the parts, with the exception of the lines given to Smicrines. Charisius is addressed, or referred to, at line 426. One or both of his friends, Simmias and Chaerestratus, are present. (At 473, later, Chaerestratus is certainly present.)

In line 414 must come a change of speaker, as "Simmias" occurs as subject. In the next line someone continues (or breaks in): "Let us go away . . . by Helios!" Someone refers to the "superciliousness" of the old man (?). It is Charisius probably who says: "I at least am done for" (418). Somebody is referred to as "hesitant" or "boresome." One of the friends goes off at line 419 and, probably, Charisius.

In lines 420-448 Smicrines and (probably) one of the friends are talking about Charisius. Smicrines says: "And then . . . my daughter . . . she (probably Abrotonon) has given birth to a child." Someone makes a reply, now unintelligible. Smicrines resumes, speaking of Charisius, "Charisius . . . this your friend was not ashamed to beget a child by a harlot . . . He has taken (her into his house)." One of the young men replies (431-433).

The friend tries to make capital out of this for Charisius, and emphasises: "the unfortunate one." Smicrines then (438) continues:—"Well then, let's leave him out. But perhaps I am a busybody, and exceed my rights, although it were permissible, according to reason, for me to take my daughter and go off. This, indeed, I will do and, as it happens, it is all but decided on by me. I call you to witness. THE ARBITRANTS

The friend (Simmias or Chaerestratus?) again tries, line 446, to put in a plea for Charisius. Smicrines cuts him short; "Now don't you even (? try to say another word) . . . although"

(Fourteen lines are lacking.)

At line 463 the friend is still trying to shield Charisius and, while admitting his irregularities, claims that they are due simply to his despair; he is seeking distraction from his sorrow:

(SIMMIAS?)

He hates this so-called "gay" life. He was drinking with so-and-so; last night he had such and such a girl; he will provide for having such and such a one to-morrow.¹

Smicrines seems to be speaking in the broken lines (466-473) and seems to say: "She bore (him a child). . . . Don't (say) anything more to me . . . he has given us as a relative"

CHAERESTRATUS

(perhaps re-enters and says to (?) Simmias, or, if he is already present, says as an aside)

This old man is evidently a high and mighty one, by Zeus.

And not even while living at home would you any longer, perchance, be allowed the use as a servant, in case of need, of some one of his imported ladies!—Naturally, for all things are held to belong to the husband and not a single thing will be yours, his wife.¹

And in the matter of festivals, Pamphila, notice his extravagance. Item: Thesmophoria,² put that down for two; Scirophoria,² for two! Observe carefully how his substance goes to waste. Has he not, admittedly, come to utter ruin? Well, consider, pray, your rôle. He claims he must be off to (Peiraeus).³

² As if to say: He must bear the double expenses for two ladies incidental to the festivities of the Thesmophoria (the great women's festival in October in honour of Demeter—e.g. "Christmas"!) and those of the Scirophoria (the June festival when the women's parasols were en évidence—e.g. "Easter"!), and so on through the year. (See reference to Professor Harmon, Introd. p. 12.)

³ That is, to ménage No. 2, established down at "The Harbour."

On his arrival there he does his devoirs. By this you will be vexed. Stay. Returning again to the city he continues unrestrainedly his drinking, of course with some harlot.

PAMPHILA

I'll be going now, since someone has come out :

Smicrines, in the fragmentary lines (from the middle of 541 through 542 and 543) seems to try to re-enforce his argument.

(A lacuna of (?) two pages (= 70 lines), sufficient (1) for Smicrines, after Pamphila has gone back into the house, to finish his monologue and go off, and (2) for the first lines of a new scene.)

THE ARBITRANTS

To tell. And, "O my sweet, what noble things you say!"

He cried aloud, and smote his head with vehemence.
And presently again: "To have a wife like this
And chance on such misfortune, wretched me!"

At last—

When, having overheard it all, he'd gone indoors—
Hair-plucking, roaring, bursts of frenzy manifold
Went on within. For, "Sinner that I am," he'd say,
And say again, "when I had done the same myself,
And when I'm proved the father of a bastard boy,
No whit of pardon felt I, nay, nor granted her,
Although she'd had the same mischance. Barbarian, Unfeeling one!" Thus stoutly he berates himself.
With bloodshot eyes he flames. And I'm dried up with fear

And all a-shiver I, for if, in mood like this
He anywhere catch sight of me who slander'd her,
'Tis like enough he'd kill me. So I've sneaked out here

Unnoticed. Where to go? What plan? All's up with me!

I'm dead and done for! There's the door now.
Out he comes!

O save me, Saviour Zeus, if it be possible!

THE ARBITRANTS

Myself so innocent and spotless in my life !—
Right well and very fittingly the power divine
Has used me—here but human I'm shown up to be.
“ You thrice-unlucky, puffed-up boastful chatterer,
Your wife's involuntary ill-luck you'll not bear.
But I will show that you have stumbled just as much.
To you she'll then be kind, but you dishonour her,
And you shall be shown up to have become at once
A luckless and a loutish and unfeeling man.
Most like indeed to your thoughts then was what but now
She said unto her father: ‘ Partner of his life
I come and, being such, I must not shirk ill-luck
When it befalls.’ But you were high and mighty, you ! ”

In the broken lines 708–735,¹ Charisius is first continuing his monologue. He seems to exclaim: “ Barbarian that I was ! . . . cleverly along with her . . . some deity <now> utterly <confounding> will pursue me ; but her father will treat her most unbecomingly. Yet what have I to do with her father ? I will speak forth explicitly : ‘ Don't make me any trouble, Smicrines. My wife is not deserting me. Why then do you disturb and bring pressure upon Pamphila ? ’ ”

(Onesimus comes out, speaking to Abrotonon concealed in the vestibule.)

CHARISIUS (continues, to Onesimus).—What, do I see you again ?

¹ The actual restorations in 708–735 are, some of them, tours de force (see text), but the general meaning is pretty clear.

THE ARBITRANTS

ONESIMUS.—She persuaded me to it, Yes, by Apollo and the gods.

CHARISIUS.—What? Temple-looter, you'd cheat me?

ABROTONON

Don't wrangle on,
My dearest sir! 'Tis your own wedded wife's, this
child,
Her own and not another's.

CHARISIUS

Would to god 'twere so!

ABROTONON

By dear Demeter, yes!

CHARISIUS

What tale is this you tell?

ABROTONON

A true one, yes, by Zeus.

CHARISIUS

The baby Pamphila's?

'Twas really hers?

ABROTONON

And, item, yours too.

CHARISIUS

Pamphila's!

Abrotonon, I pray, don't make me walk on air!

THE ARBITRANTS

In the dozen lines (753-764) down to the end of the act only mutilated verse-ends remain, but the sense yielded by them is entirely consistent with the éclaircissement in the above scene.

Abrotonon, apparently, is at first explaining why she pretended to be the mother, and tells Charisius, in the fourth line, that she could not betray her real belief "until she knew everything." Dialogue follows in which, apparently, all three take part. Charisius, finally, seems to be saying: "I wish" to learn of all "these things" from Pamphila herself. He rushes into his own house to be reconciled with his wife. Onesimus and Abrotonon go off together, and perhaps have the conversation referred to at the beginning of the next act. Later, we may perhaps assume, Onesimus is called in by Charisius and emancipated.

Look now,
Chaerestratus. For next thereafter, "See to it,"
Said she, "that you stand by Charisius in all, Loyal as heretofore—you know." Why, surely she
Is no mere strumpet! Nay, what's more, her services
Are not the common sort, but by her energy
She actually found for us our child.

CHAERESTRATUS (interrupting)

Well, you
Are free! Enough! Don't stand there, looking on the ground!
And first go take her by herself alone, and then
My friend, the dearest and the sweetest in my eyes, (Chaerestratus seems to be planning for a conference with Charisius to persuade him that he owes his new-found happiness to Abrotonon and should, therefore, give up his anger against her on account of her benevolent deceit, and buy her freedom from her master. The person (feminine) whom Onesimus is first to interview alone may be either Abrotonon herself, in order to have her carefully primed, or else Pamphila, who would be now all-powerful with Charisius and who, as we have come to know her, is above ordinary jealousies and would certainly feel nothing but gratitude towards Abrotonon.

After a lacuna of circa 4 lines just such a scene of persuasion follows (if the fragment U¹ is correctly inserted here).

THE ARBITRANTS

SCENE. CHARISIUS, ONESIMUS (CHAERE-STRATUS, probably ABROTONON, and perhaps PAMPHILA).

Charisius is exultant over the happy turn of affairs, but he is still piqued at Abrotonon for tricking him even to his own advantage. He had forgiven Onesimus more easily, but Abrotonon had furnished the brains in the scheme. His amour-propre has been damaged by her cleverness. Charisius makes some remark. Then Chaerestratus (?) puts in: "In reality it is Abrotonon" whom you have to thank. Charisius replies: "Yet she cheated me . . ." Onesimus says: "Nay, she saved the child, joining her forces with mine . . . I at least lent a helping hand."

From the next fifteen broken lines, 786-800, not much can be inferred with certainty. There is frequent change of speakers with, apparently, two longer speeches interspersed. It is probably a continuation of the same scene.

THE ARBITRANTS

In the following 21 fragmentary lines, 815-835, there is little to indicate the subject-matter. An ingenious, but very doubtful, restoration of line 820 (see notes, text) would bring in the "necklace" again and perhaps the other birth-tokens. The good charcoal-burner, Syriscus, is due to appear again somewhere to receive his reward for preserving the child. But this item, with others, may have been appropriately introduced after the more acute dénouement (915-end) and so may have rounded out an otherwise short closing act.

(A lacuna of about 11 lines, 836-848.)

When the text of the papyrus again begins (848), someone, apparently Chaerestratus, has been commissioned to take Abrotonon to her master and to arrange, by formal purchase, to set her free from slavery. Someone—either Charisius or Abrotonon herself—is described as "sound-minded," or "self-controlled," or "honest," and Chaerestratus departs with his charge, uttering, as he leaves, the following two-edged compliment:

 . . is sound-minded, else he'd never, I know well,
 Have held aloof from such a girl. I'll do the same.

THE ARBITRANTS

SCENE. SMICRINES alone

Smicrines has returned determined to carry out his threat to force Pamphila to abandon her husband and to go back, with her dowry, to her father's house. Since persuasion does not avail with her, force must be employed. From the time Smicrines enters at the side-entrance till he reaches his son-in-law's door he is scolding at Sophrona, rehearsing, in monologue, his intended conversation with her. He alone is still in ignorance of the true situation.

SMICRINES (to himself)

If I don't crack that head of yours, O Sophrona,
May deep damnation seize me! You'd admonish me?
You too? I'm headstrong, am I, taking home my girl?
You hag, you temple-looter! I'm to wait about Till this fine lord of hers shall eat up what I gave
As dowry? And am I to bandy arguments
About my own? To that would you persuade me, you?
Were it not better quick to take the upper hand?
You'll rue it bitterly if you wag tongue again.
What? I discuss the case with Sophrona as judge?
"Persuade her to a change when you get sight of her!"
As so I hope for blessing, you 'tis I'll persuade.
For, Sophrona, on my way home—you've seen the pond
As you've passed by—well, there I'll make an end of you
And souse you under all the livelong night, until I make you think my thoughts and stop your taking part Against me.

(Approaches the door of Charisius's house.)

I must bang this door. It's locked. Boys! Boy!
Let someone open! Boys! Do I not order you?
(Onesimus opens the door and comes out, but bars the entrance to Smicrines.)

THE GIRL FROM SAMOS ¹

INTRODUCTION

ALTHOUGH more than half of this play is lost, the parts preserved are so nearly unbroken that we can study with confidence Menander's style and method through continuous scenes. Some of the characters seem little more than stock types, but Chrysis, if we may judge by what remains, exhibits some of the more delicate character-drawing—unselfishness and pathos—that recurs in the admirable delineation of Abrotonon in The Arbitrants. Demeas, too, is much more than a type. He will not be confused in memory with any other of Menander's personages. An allusion to Chaerephon in v. 401 is thought (cf. Capps, p. 233) to date the composition some time not later than 310 B.C. This would tally well enough with the poet's growing firmness of touch in delineating character.

Certain details in the unfolding of the plot are lost owing to the breaks in the text, but, by holding in solution some alternative possibilities, we may probably follow the main ² thread of the story and, incidentally, enjoy fully the two or three scenes which add materially to a vivid conception of Athenian life.

¹ The title of this play is inferred from the allusions in lines 53 and 142 which seem to identify it with the "Samian Girl of Menander," cited by Phrynichus in quoting from the play the one fragment (see below) previously known. For a possible supplementary title: "or the Wet-nurse," see note 1 on p. 136.

² Possibly, however, the story of the Samian girl, who gives the title to the play, may have been made very prominent in the missing acts.

INTRODUCTION

The plot, as far as it can be made out, is briefly as follows. Demeas, a well-to-do Athenian bachelor, has adopted Moschion, whom he loves as his own son. He is living in a comfortable home, with Chrysis as mistress of the house. Chrysis had come to Athens as a young girl of unknown parentage from Samos. Demeas had taken her to his home, and a sincere affection exists between them, although her supposed foreign extraction prevents formal marriage, according to traditional Athenian custom. The son, Moschion, has fallen in love with Plangon, daughter of Niceratus, Demeas's friend and next-door neighbour. As Niceratus is too poor to give Plangon an adequate marriage portion the young couple do not venture to confess their love to their fathers. During a somewhat prolonged absence¹ of Demeas from home Chrysis gave birth to a child by him. The child died. Meanwhile Plangon has given birth to a child by Moschion, and Chrysis, from an unselfish desire to help Moschion, and also, doubtless, impelled by her awakened maternal instinct, undertakes to rear the child. Demeas returns, and Chrysis, knowing (apparently) that he is averse to having a child of his own, does not attempt to assume that the child is hers, but says that it is a foundling and persuades him, with difficulty, to allow her to keep it in the house.²

² There is another theory, adopted by various editors, that there are two babies in the house at once—one Plangon's and

INTRODUCTION

It may seem, indeed, less probable that he would have consented to rear a foundling than to have been reconciled to his own child by Chrysis. The situation, however, is necessary for the entanglement of the plot. Demeas on his return hears some vague rumours which make him anxious about Moschion, one the child of Demeas and Chrysis. This theory is ably defended by Capps (see Menander, Introduction, pp. 224 ff.). There are some allusions in the text as preserved that seem to give colour to it. If it could be shown that Menander was often inclined to the broadly farcical it might seem more cogent, but, in our ignorance of the matter contained in the missing lines, the alternative theory, adopted above, furnishes a working hypothesis which is, I believe, at least not inconsistent with the situations developed in the course of the play. The main difficulty is a difficulty on any (tenable!) theory. Demeas is surprised when he sees Chrysis suckling a baby herself. His surprise only proves that he, not knowing that she had herself given birth to a child, had accepted without suspicion her request to adopt a foundling. The confused references to the baby by the excited Niceratus and Demeas and the contradictions and involuntary admissions of half-truth into which the slave, Parmenon, is betrayed, would all seem natural to an audience in possession of the plot as unfolded in the missing scenes. In line 384, for instance, Niceratus's exclamation, "Was I not bamboozled by him?" seems to imply definitely that in this scene he now knows that the baby is Plangon's and Moschion's. Two babies are not mentioned outright in the lines preserved. When Demeas (l. 377) says "mine" it is subtle (see Capps, ad loc.), but not necessary, to assume that he is unconsciously speaking of his son, not his grandson. That Demeas (l. 170) gives more than one maid-servant to the banished Chrysis might seem to lend colour to the theory of two babies, both alive; but line 161, just before, certainly lends no support to this. The chief difficulty, perhaps, in the theory of the one living child is that there seems to be insufficient reason why Parmenon should not own up that the baby is the child of Moschion and Plangon when (ll. 101 ff.) he finds Demeas has made his damaging discovery.

INTRODUCTION

and has recourse at once to the usual parental therapeutics. He announces to Moschion that he is to marry Plangon, the daughter of Niceratus. Moschion acquiesces with such unexpected alacrity that Demeas, even at this point, is almost rendered suspicious. When our manuscript begins, at the opening of the second¹ act, the preparations for the wedding are well under way. The text itself will develop the remainder of the plot, as far as it is extant.

¹ The question of the identification of the Acts in the fragments preserved is perplexing. The first fragment of the Cairo MS. seems to be near the beginning of the play, i.e. very near the beginning of Act II. The lacuna (after l. 204) seems to be mechanically determined (see Capps, p. 233) as consisting of about 140 lines. Consequently it is assumed that line 414 begins Act III. But the closing scene of this "Act III" also seems to bring us close to a natural ending of the whole play. We must therefore either assume two acts missing at the end, with a recrudescence of plot-entanglement, involving perhaps (on the two living babies theory) a resurrection of Chrysis's suppressed infant or, more probably, a detailed recognition of the supposed "Samian" as being really of Attic parentage; or else assume that the missing acts should have a place somewhere earlier in the play. In the latter case Act "III" should be numbered Act V, and the numbering of the lines would be mere guess-work.

He then continues (taking the audience, from time to time, into his confidence) :

For soon as ever I had come into the house,
All in a hurry to prepare the wedding-feast,
I, merely stating to the household what was on,
Gave orders to make ready all things requisite :
To furbish up ; to cook ; and with the basket-rite ²
To make beginning. Everything was going on,
Of course, quite smoothly, but the haste to do their tasks
Would bring in some confusion, as you might expect,
Amongst them. On a bed there lay, to one side flung,
The baby, bawling on and on. The servants too

Were shouting, "Flour! Water! Give me oil! Some coals!"

And I myself, too, helping, giving this and that,
Into the store-room, as it chanced, had gone, from whence

I did not come directly, busy laying out
More food than common and inspecting many things
Within. Just then, while I was there, a woman came,
Descending from an upper storey, from above,
Into the store-room's antechamber.—For with us,
There's an apartment, as it happens, for the looms,
So placed that through it is the entrance to the stairs
And to the store-room.—She was nurse to Moschion
And getting on in years, a former slave of mine
But now set free.—And, when she caught sight of the child

A-bawling, bawling as it lay left all alone,
She, knowing nothing of my being there inside,
Comes forward; thinks herself quite safe for chattering
Such things you know as women will—thus: "Darling child!"

Says she, and "Blessed treasure, where's its mammy gone?"

And then she kissed and carried it about and, when
It stopped its crying, to herself she says, "Ah me!
Ah, wretched that I am, it seems but yesterday
That I was fondly suckling Moschion himself,
And, now that here he has a baby of his own,

THE GIRL FROM SAMOS

He's cleared himself, for when this marriage scheme was broached

He eagerly gave ear. For not because in love,
As then I thought, was he so eager, but because
He wished at last to shun my "Helen" there within.
For her I hold responsible for what has chanced.
She came upon him, we'll suppose, when drunk,
forsooth,

And not himself. Many a deed like this is wrought
Through youth's incontinence, when Opportunity,
Who plots against his neighbour, gets the upper hand.
For not at all does this seem credible to me
That he, so orderly, and continent towards all
Outsiders, now should prove to be like this towards me;
Not though he ten times were adopted, not my son
By blood. For I don't think of that. His character
I mark. But she's a common woman of the slums,
A pest, a—nay, why rage? By that, O Demeas,
You'll get no further. Now you needs must be a man;
Forget your longing; cease from loving; and conceal,
As far as may be, for your son's sake, this mischance
That has occurred, and thrust headforemost to the crows,

Out of your house, this evil Samian. You have A pretext, too, because she took that baby in.
For you must not make clear a single thing beside.
Endure and set your teeth. Bear up like high-bred man.

(Lacuna of circa 140 verses to F³.)

At the end of the preceding scene Niceratus offered Chrysis the shelter of his house, into which they retired, with the child and nurse. At this point the unfounded suspicions which Demeas harbours against Moschion and Chrysis were cleared up (vv. 412 ff.). Probably Moschion has heard of them from Parmenon, whom he has met in the city. We must assume, further, that after Demeas retired into his house to resume the interrupted arrangements for the wedding Moschion and Niceratus held a conversation, in which the latter, curious concerning the quarrel between Demeas and Chrysis, questioned the young man about the baby which Chrysis had taken to rear, and that Moschion declared that it was a foundling of unknown parentage. Make all things ready for the wedding in the house,
He burst in like a madman in the midst of all
And barred me out of doors.

NICERATUS

Can Demeas be mad?

(Lacuna of about 140 lines.)

Niceratus, into which we are introduced in F³, then ensues. Demeas has learned that his suspicions were unfounded as regards his son and, incidentally, has apparently learned also the true explanation of the situation which (v. 54) originally led him to suspect Chrysis, and he is now eager enough to receive her back into his home (v. 367). As to his quarrel with Chrysis, he cannot divulge to Niceratus the real reason for it. But in answer to the latter's inquiries concerning it he probably refers to the "foundling" as the cause of the trouble and then informs Niceratus that it is a bastard child of Plangon, without, however, saying who the father is. He tries to persuade Niceratus that it is, after all, a "trifling" matter.

THE GIRL FROM SAMOS

DEMEAS

Yes, by Zeus.

If this fellow hears what's happened, vexed he'll be,
he'll bawl and bawl.

Why, the man is savage, swinish, obstinate in character—

Cursèd me, did it behoove me thoughts like that to entertain?

By Hephaestus, I'd be justly done to death.

(Hears an outcry in Niceratus's house.)

Good Heracles!

How he's roaring! I was right. He shouts for fire;
says that he

First will chop, then burn the baby. Roasting grandson I shall see.

Now again the door he's banging. Cyclone he, or thunderbolt,

Not a trace of human in him.

NICERATUS (at the door)

Demeas, 'gainst me is leagued
Chrysis in outrageous action.

DEMEAS

What is this you say to me?

NICERATUS

Chrysis has my wife persuaded not a single fault to own;

What is more, my daughter neither. She by force
the baby holds;

Says she will not hand him over. Hence you need not be surprised

If this hand of mine shall slay her.

DEMEAS

Slay the woman with your hand?

DEMEAS

Don't do that, Niceratus.

NICERATUS

Yes, I wanted to forewarn you.

(Rushes back into the house.)

DEMEAS

Sure, he's melancholy mad.
With a jump indoors he's vanished. In this mischief what's to do?
Never, by the gods, no never, have I known myself till now
Caught in such a hurly-burly. After all, 'twere far the best Clearly to explain the matter—Phoebus! There's the door again.
(Chrysis comes running from the house of Niceratus, the baby in her arms. Niceratus, a club in his hand, is in hot pursuit. He has overheard enough to infer that Moschion is father of the child.)

SCENE. DEMEAS, CHRYSIS, NICERATUS

I am in for single combats, that's the order of the day.

(To Niceratus)

What d'ye want ? Whom are you chasing ?

NICERATUS

Demeas, stand off ! Away !
Once my hands are on the baby I will hear the

DEMEAS (aside, trying to hold Niceratus)

He is crazy. (To Niceratus) What ! You'll hit me ?

NICERATUS

Yes, sir !

DEMEAS (aside to Chrysis)

Quick now ! Curse you, in !

(To Niceratus)

Well, then, here is one from me, sir.

(Returns the blow, and grapples with Niceratus while he calls to Chrysis.)

Chrysis ! He's the stronger. Run !

DEMEAS

Nonsense! He will wed the girl.
No, there's no such thing the matter. Come and

Just aside here.

DEMEAS

Yes, and take yourself in hand.

DEMEAS

Zeus at one time turns to gold,
Next to water. See? His doings! We have found the leak quite soon.

NICERATUS

Me like silly sheep you're cheating.

SCENE 1. MOSCHION (alone)

MOSCHION

At that time from the blame, which then was laid on me,

Set free with difficulty, I was well content,
And counted quite enough for me, as great good luck,
The way things stood. But as I grow more self-possessed

And as I cast up my accounts, I'm utterly Beside myself and bitterly enraged when I
Reflect on how my father thought that I had sinned.
If all the girl's affairs were now in first-rate shape
Nor obstacles so many—oaths, desire, and time,
And habit, whereunto I made myself a slave,
He never would have had the chance a second time
To blame me so, unto my very face at least,

But from this city vanishing, I'd go far off
To Bactria or Caria, and dwell out there
As warrior. But, as it is, on thy account,
My dearest Plangon, no heroic deed I'll do.

And yet not tamely nor like low-born man must I Ignore this altogether, but in word, at least,
If nothing more, I'd like to scare him and pretend
I'm making off. For in the future rather more He'll check himself from doing what's unkind to me
Again, when once he sees me counting this no joke.

By Zeus the highest, I have been and done a deed
That's senseless and contemptible. Not one thing

Pray, what was there that I had done to warrant this?
Come, point by point, just let us clearly face the facts.
First item: "My young master wronged a free-born

But Parmenon, I take it, surely does no wrong.
"She's found with child." But Parmenon is not to

From one of the last scenes, describing the wedding ceremony, we have one line preserved.

Frankincense bring and, Trypha, heap the fire high.

(We may assume that Moschion in the end is completely reconciled with Demeas, his adoptive father. Chrysis, too, the supposed foreigner from Samos, perhaps by the timely intervention of some new character, is probably found to be of pure Attic birth and therefore an eligible wife for Demeas, so that the play closed with a double wedding.)

THE GIRL WHO GETS HER HAIR CUT SHORT

THE GIRL WHO GETS HER HAIR CUT SHORT¹

INTRODUCTION

THIS comedy, the Periceïromene, is not often cited in antiquity, but it was, as may be assumed from the frequent echoes² of the story, one of the famous plays.

The play owes its title to the act of the jealous soldier-lover, Polemon, who in a sudden rage cuts off short the hair of Glycera, whom he deeply loves. He has seen her being kissed by Moschion, whom Glycera alone knows as her brother, being unable to reveal the fact through fear of injuring his career.

The development of the plot, in so far as we are able to make out the details, may be inferred from the text itself together with the accompanying explanations inserted below.

Polemon, it may be noticed, though impulsive, is not the regulation braggart soldier—miles gloriosus. Pataecus, it is assumed (see Capps, Introduction), is the second husband of Myrrhina and, therefore, as he supposes, the step-father of Moschion. When he finds later that Moschion is his own son, an explanation from Myrrhina will be forthcoming as to why she concealed from him the fact that Moschion is only her adopted son.

² See Capps, Introd. to Periceïromene, note 1, pp. 131–133.

INTRODUCTION

The exposition of the argument is given in a belated prologue following some introductory scenes. The goddess Agnoia, or Misapprehension, officiates in this capacity, as does the tutelary Genius of the household in the Hero.

The chorus, probably composed of Polemon's boon-companions, appears after the second act and probably at other places in the course of the play. The play may be dated about 302-301 B.C.,¹ only ten years before Menander's death, when his work was already matured.

To the two lines preserved in the Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta (Nos. 391, 392 K) there have been added since 1899, from three² successive discoveries in Egypt, 444 verses, and Fragment No. 569 K is with confidence added to the play, so that we now possess 448 lines. There are numerous minor lacunae in the text and various unsolved problems in regard to the plot, but the long stretches of almost unbroken text give large opportunity for critical study of Menander and in some parts, at least, re-enforce his traditional reputation.

² These are: (1) Oxyr. papyr. ii. p. 11 (1899), gives some insignificant verse-ends and 51 nearly complete lines from near the end of the play; (2) the Cairo papyr. (1907), 320 lines (of these lines 42-59 recur in a Heidelberg papyrus, No. 219); (3) the Leipzig fragments from Antinupolis (published by Körte 1908), contain 121 lines, of which 48 lines overlap the text of the Cairo MS.

INTRODUCTION

so that we arrive at 907 for the last numbered line. The numbers in [] on the left hand of the Greek text are for identification with those of the text of the facsimile edition (L^2) of the Cairo MS., beginning with the point where they diverge from the present edition. The beginning of the Leipzig, Heidelberg, and Oxyrhynchus fragments respectively are indicated in the notes.

ACT I

SCENE. ΠΟΛΕΜΩΝ, ΓΛΥΚΕΡΑ

The initial scenes, now lost (about 120 verses), created the situation in the household of Polemon which remained unchanged until near the end of the play—Glycera living as a refugee in a neighbour's house, Polemon trying by every means to regain her. One of the first scenes was an interview between these two, ending in a rupture which seemed irreparable. The evening before (vv. 33, 180) Polemon had seen Moschion kissing Glycera and, ignorant that he is her brother, had departed in violent anger to a place in the country, promising to decide at a later time upon his course of action (v. 39). The night he had spent in an effort to drown his sorrow

(v. 869). The next morning he had returned to his house, and in a fit of jealous rage had shorn the hair from the head of Glycera with his sword. It is after this outrage has been committed that the two appear before the house and engage in an angry dialogue in which Glycera, unable to explain the real facts, protests in vain her innocence of wrong-doing.

To this scene probably belongs the following quotation. If so, Polemon must already have repented his rash act and become willing to forgive Glycera, although the affair with Moschion is still unexplained.

POLEMON

Why are you weeping, Glycera? I take my oath,
My dearest, by Athena and Olympian Zeus—

GLYCERA

It's under oath you've been ere now these many times.

SCENE. GLYCERA, DORIS

With the help of her maid, Doris, Glycera carries out her plan of leaving Polemon's house. Myrrhina, the wife of the next-door neighbour, Pataecus, offers to give her shelter (vv. 143, 282). They hastily move thither, taking with them the necessary personal effects. The goddess Misapprehension appears and tells the story of the twin infants who had been exposed many years ago by their parents and discovered by a poor old woman. The first few lines of the narrative are lost ; the disposition which the woman made of the boy and the girl is now disclosed :

SCENE. MISAPPREHENSION

MISAPPREHENSION

She's fain to rear the one of these, the girl, because
She craved a daughter for herself, the other child
She gave unto a wealthy woman dwelling here Within this house, who lacked a child. This was the way

It happened. But, when several years had intervened
And when the war and evil times waxed always worse
In Corinth, then the aged woman, straitened sore—
Because the girl, whom now you see, was fully grown
And this impetuous young fellow, born and bred
Corinthian, had appeared as lover—gives to him
The girl, as if her daughter born, to have and hold.
At length, her powers failing, and foreseeing now
Some sudden end of life, no longer she concealed
The circumstances, but she tells the girl how she Adopted her as foundling ; gives to her besides The swaddling-clothes¹ belonging to her ; and explains

About her own blood-brother hitherto unknown.
Making for human fortune some provision thus
If ever she might need assistance, for in him
She saw her one relation ; watching well besides Lest, thanks to me, Misapprehension, something

Against their will, because she saw that he was rich

And ever drinking, while the girl was comely, young,
And left in utterly unstable union.

And so she died. But he, the soldier, bought this house

Not long ago. The girl, however, though she dwelt
As next-door neighbour to her brother, has not let
The matter out nor wishes him to change a lot
That seems so brilliant, but she'd like him to enjoy
The gifts of fortune. She, as luck would have it, chanced

Last evening—for, as said above, he's overbold
And makes a point of always hanging round the house—

To have been seen by him as she was sending off
Her maid upon some errand. Catching sight of her
Just by the door and running up to her, forthwith
He kissed and kissed and kept on hugging her. But she,

Apprised before that 'twas her brother, held her ground.

Just then up came the other man¹ and saw it all.

The sequel he has told himself how it befell.

Now he went off remarking that at leisure he Would wish a further interview.² But she the while Stood there and wept, bemoaning that she was not free

To act untrammelled. All of this was set ablaze Because of what's to follow. First: that he should fall

Into a passion—for 'twas I that egged him on

¹ Polemon.

If 'twas I that chased and captured all this for you,
Moschion ;

If 'twas I won her to come here, using countless arguments,

If 'twas I that made your mother give her welcome and prepare

All your pleasure—what's for me, then ?

MOSCHION

Look you, Davus, what life, say.

Of all lives you'd find most pleasing ?

DAVUS

Let's look into that with care,

MOSCHION

Wouldn't you prefer the treadmill ?

DAVUS

I—the treadmill ?

MOSCHION (objectively)¹

Now, thinks he,

With all speed to that I'm coming !

For my rôle . . . is . . . rather.

DAVUS

Good! But, as the saying goes,
Now enough of prayers and praying. Here's your wished-for girl arrived.
Straight into the house, young master.

MOSCHION

Right you are. Yes, that's my lay.
It's my chance now to console her and to mock her soldier-man,
God-detested, feather-crested commandant!

DAVUS

Indeed you may.

MOSCHION

You, there, Davus, go indoors now, be my spy on everything.
Make report: What is she doing? Where's my mother? As for me,
How are they disposed to welcome? In a matter such as this
You've no need of nice instructions, you are clever.

DAVUS

I will go.

MOSCHION

I'll await you, Davus, strolling up and down before the door.

[Exit Davus into the house of Pataecus. Moschion soliloquizes.]

Well, when I approached last evening, this is how she then behaved:
Fled not when I ran to meet her, but embraced and held me fast.

I am not, it seems, unpleasing, when one meets or looks at me,
By Athena, to my thinking I'm a charmer to the girls.
But I now to Adrasteia¹—may it please her—make my bow.

(Davus returns from his errand.)

DAVUS

She is freshly bathed, and seated, Moschion.

MOSCHION

The darling thing!

DAVUS

And your mother walks about there busied with—I know not what!
And the luncheon's served and ready, and from what is going on,
Seems to me, 'tis you they wait for.

MOSCHION

So I thought long since myself.
Am I then unpleasing? Did you tell them that I'm ready here?

DAVUS

No, by Zeus.

MOSCHION

Go now and tell them.

DAVUS (obeying)

As you see, I'm off again.

(Davus re-enters the house.)

¹ For the Greek formula: "Make obeisance to Adrasteia" (Nemesis), cf. "Knock on wood," the similar superstition surviving in English. cf. Fragm. No. 321 K. Adrasteia (the Inescapable) = Nemesis (Retribution).

She'll be shy now when we enter, that, of course, I

Cover up her face—'tis custom—but I must on entering Forthwith up and kiss my mother, win her wholly to my will,
Turn to flattery and tell her that for her alone I live.
For she treats this present business just as if it were her own.

Hark! Again the door is creaking, some one comes.
(Davus returns, crestfallen.)

Well, slave, how now?
How you hesitate, now, Davus, to approach me!

DAVUS

Yes, by Zeus,
It's too queer. Why, when I entered, told your mother you're at hand,
Straight she says: "No more of that, sir." Adds:
"From whom, pray, has he heard?"
Is it you who've told your master that, because the girl was scared,
Here with us she's taken refuge? May you not live out the year.
Off," says she, "Off to perdition! Slave, begone, away, away!"
Listen now to one thing more, sir: all our scheme is ruined quite;
Far from pleased was she on learning of your presence.

(Sosias arrives from the country in time to catch sight of Moschion as he enters the house. Sosias is accompanied by a couple of targeteers—his "army." He stations his forces in front of the house of Pataecus. He does not see Davus, who stands at one side.)

SCENE. SOSIAS, DAVUS (in concealment)

SOSIAS

Again I'm on a mission; bringing cloak and sword.
I'm told to reconnoitre; then to make report
Of what she's doing, and I'm just upon the verge
Of telling how I caught the lover here within
That he may leap up and come running. That I'd do
Did I not feel that he's so very pitiful,
My master, luckless that he is. It is no dream,
For I believe my eyes. A bitter coming home!
(Sosias enters Polemon's house to deposit cloak and sword.)

DAVUS (in concealment)

The hireling has arrived. A sorry state of things
Is this, yes, by Apollo absolutely so.
Not even yet I reckon in what's chief of all:
If from the country soon his master comes again;
How great confusion he will cause when he turns up.

SOSIAS

If you come near me, Doris, I will pay you out,
Yes, thoroughly. You've been the most to blame

Now as you hope for safety, say that she in fear
Has run off somewhere to a woman.

Off somewhere to a woman?”

Yes, to Myrrhina,
Next door, she's gone. Else may no wish of mine

You see where she has gone! Gone to her darling, here!

DORIS

Of course. What else now do you ask for, Sosias?

(Impatiently, to Sosias)

Be off! Be off with you!

(Lacuna of about 57 verses to the first Leipzig fragment.)

In this interval Polemon, repentant of his own conduct and eager for Glycera's return, whether by force or persuasion, has been in consultation with Pataecus. As Polemon and Sosias are conferring they are joined by Pataecus. Abrotonon also appears. Perhaps the wily Davrus may have secured her to divert Sosias and his men by liberal potations.

SCENE. POLEMON, SOSIAS with his men,
PATAECUS, ABROTONON¹

Pataecus is a friend of both parties and is convinced that the quarrel is due to a misunderstanding, not to disloyalty on the part of Glycera. He has understood from the women that Glycera has fled because of Polemon's treatment of her (v. 369). He advises Polemon to abandon hostile measures and to try to win Glycera back by gentler means.

SOSIAS (to Polemon)

He comes from yonder, having just received some cash.

Believe me, he betrays the army and yourself.

PATAECUS (to Sosias)

Be off and sleep, you fool, drop all this fighting, do.
Your health's not good—yes, you I mean—you're not so well,
Nay, less; for you are drunk!

SOSIAS (indignantly)

What, "less"? When I have drunk
Perhaps a gill or two—no more—foresaw all this
And saved myself for future need, poor me?

POLEMON

(recognizing that Sosias is drunk, to Pataecus aside)

You're right.

(To Sosias.)

Give in to me.

THE GIRL WHO GETS HER HAIR CUT SHORT

Of all the many born to wretchedness in this
Our generation—for amongst the Hellenes all,
Whate'er the cause, there has sprung up a noble crop
Of such—there's no one of them all so wretched lives,
In my opinion, as myself. For soon as I Went in, without attempting any single thing
Of all that was my wont, not even mother's room
I entered, nay, nor any of the household called,
But to a room betook myself aside and there
I lay, quite self-controlled. And I send Davus in
To tell my mother this, and merely this, that I've Arrived. However he, with little care for me,
On finding luncheon laid out ready for them there,
Went on and took his fill. I, lying down the while,
Kept saying to myself: "Here presently will come
My mother and will bring me word from her I love,
Upon what terms she says that she and I might make
Agreement." I was practising a speech myself . . .

(Lacuna of about 157 verses to K².)

Moschion probably goes on to tell of a confidential talk between Glycera and Myrrhina which he has overheard. He is convinced that his hopes are illusory and realizes that he has been duped by Davus. He has also heard things which arouse his curiosity regarding Glycera (v. 665), but not enough to reveal the facts in full. When Pataecus comes out of Polemon's house, Moschion conceals himself from view. He is present, but unobserved by the others, throughout the following scenes.

THE GIRL WHO GETS HER HAIR CUT SHORT

SCENE. GLYCERA, PATAECUS, DORIS,
MOSCHION (in hiding)

While inspecting the wardrobe of Glycera in Polemon's house, Pataecus seems to have noticed something among her belongings that aroused in him a suspicion as to her identity. Therefore, when he summons her from the house, he has three objects in view: the first, to secure an explanation of her conduct with Moschion; the second, to discharge his mission of reconciling her with Polemon; the third, to discover who she really is. He finds her unwilling to return to Polemon (vv. 599, 625, 630, cf. 904). She assures Pataecus, however, that her relations with Moschion have been innocent, though she admits that she has put herself in a false position with him.

GLYCERA

. [supply e.g. . . . I could have come
With no such purpose] to his mother, dearest sir,
Nor could have taken refuge here—do you not see?—
That he might wed me—(for in truth he's far beyond Poor me!)—Oh no, not that, but so that he might have
And hold me as his mistress. Wouldn't I, poor thing,
He too himself, have sought to keep it dark from them?
Would I have boldly faced his father and preferred
To be thus senseless, bring to pass a hateful deed
And in your minds embed disgraceful thoughts of me
Which you would ne'er blot out? I feel no shame at that?

Pataecus, came you here persuaded, even you,
Of this, and thought that I had been a girl like that?

PATAECUS

In sober fact these charges wrong you. I believe;
Yet, all the same, go back to him.

GLYCERA

(Lacuna of 16 verses to K¹.)

Glycera seems to have declared to Pataecus that she is free-born and also to have asked him to examine the proofs of her origin for himself, that he may assist her to establish her legal independence of Polemon. When the text begins again Glycera is explaining to Pataecus the nature of the objects, contained in the chest, which she has asked him to examine.

GLYCERA

And I received those objects as a legacy
From father and from mother, and it is my wont
To guard and keep them ever with me.

PATAECUS

Well, what is Your wish?

GLYCERA

To have them brought here safe.

MOSCHION (aside)

A thing impossible is this, methinks, as I
Now turn it over, that my mother brought to birth
And shamelessly exposed a daughter born to her.
But if this happened and if she's my sister, mine,
Why then I'm ruined utterly, O luckless me!

[Ill-starred in truth the fate] of all else left of mine?¹

GLYCERA

Make clear what you are seeking and inquire of me.

PATAECUS

Where did you get these things, to treasure thus?
Explain.

GLYCERA

They found me as a baby and these things with me.

MOSCHION (to himself, aside)

Put further out to sea, you labour in the surf.²
The crisis of my private fortunes now is come.

PATAECUS (resuming his questions)

But were you laid there all alone? Come, tell me that.

GLYCERA

Why, no. A brother also they exposed with me.

MOSCHION (aside)

That point is number one of what I sought to know.

¹ In this line, of doubtful reading, Pataecus seems to be adverting to the fate of the other child, his boy. (See Capps, ad loc.)

² Or (?): Draw back a little that I may scan your face (Given to Pataecus). See Capps's reading, notes on text.

Incredible. For she who gave you birth, she died Forthwith; and just one day before she died, my

What is it happened? How I tremble! Ah, poor me!

PATAECUS

I came to poverty, though used ere this to wealth.

GLYCERA

All in a day? But how? O gods, what awful fate!

PATAECUS (theatrically)

I learned that in the wild Aegean's wide-spread brine
Was whelmed the ship that brought us in our sustenance.

GLYCERA

Ah, wretched me, what ill luck that!

PATAECUS

So, beggared now,
Methought it were the part of one quite reft of sense
Children to rear and trail like cargo, towed astern—
(Yet children are the sweetest things of all to own!)¹—
What sort of stuff besides was left?

GLYCERA

That shall be told:
A necklace and some little ornament embossed
Were placed as tokens with the children there exposed.

ACT V

At the beginning of this act Polemon learns from Doris that Glycera is Moschion's sister and that her father is the wealthy Pataecus. Now I'll tell you what to say.

DORIS

Good news. "She'll come to you."

POLEMON

She mocked at me !

DORIS

By Aphrodite, no! Why, she was putting on Her robe. Her father looked and looked. 'Twere right that now
You celebrate Thankoffering for what has chanced.
When she has luck like this, 'tis impious to mourn.

POLEMON

By Zeus, it's right you are. You make my duty clear.
A cook's within there. Let him sacrifice the sow.

DORIS

But where's the basket and what else we need ?

POLEMON

That rite
Shall come on later, but this victim let him slay.
Nay, rather somewhere from an altar I prefer
To snatch a wreath and thus invest me.
(Takes a garland from the altar of Apollo-Agræus, near the door, and puts it on his head.)

DORIS (sarcastically)

Good, you'll seem
More plausible¹ by far.

POLEMON

Now, quick, bring Glycera.

¹ Or Doris, with sarcasm, may mean: more "natural,"

THE HERO

THE HERO¹

INTRODUCTION

THE fragments preserved of this play, though brief, are of unusual significance, as the Cairo papyrus contains a metrical hypothesis and the cast of characters.

A household god or tutelary. "Hero," like "Misapprehension" in The Girl who Gets her Hair cut Short, sets in motion the train of circumstances leading to the dénouement.

The plot as given, or inferred, is as follows. Some eighteen years before the action begins Myrrhina, a girl of good family, was wronged by a young man, who was unknown to her, probably at some festival (compare the scene in The Arbitrants). She gave birth to twins, a boy and a girl. Her nurse exposes the children, placing with them birth-tokens, including some object which had belonged to the lover. A shepherd, Tibeius, a freedman of Laches, finds and rears the children in ignorance of their parentage. Meanwhile Myrrhina marries Laches. Later, in a time of famine, Tibeius is compelled to borrow money of his former master, Laches, but dies before he is able to clear off the debt. His foster-son, Gorgias, and the sister, Plangon, undertake to work it off as servants in the house of Laches and Myrrhina, who, unknown to them, is their own mother.¹ Pheidias, a young neighbour of good family, has a love affair with Plangon, but there can be no thought of marriage with a dowerless girl. Davus, a slave and fellow-servant of Plangon, is also in love with her and is eager to marry her and save her from disgrace. Here the play begins. See hypothesis below.

INTRODUCTION

HYPOTHESIS¹

A girl gave birth to twin children, a girl and boy, and gave them to a steward to rear. Then afterwards she married her seducer. But he that was rearing them, ignorant (of the circumstances), gave the children, as security for loans of money, to him (i.e. the husband). And a servant-man fell in love with the girl, supposing that she was a fellow-slave. Now a neighbour had already wronged the girl by violence. The servant-man wished to assume the responsibility, but the mother, ignorant of the facts, was enraged at him. When the facts came out, the old man (the husband) found through a recognition-scene that the children were his own, and he that had wronged the girl voluntarily took her to wife.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

GETAS,² a slave.

DAVUS, a slave of Laches.

The "HERO," or household god.

MYRRHINA, mother of the children, now wife of Laches.

PHEIDIAS, a young neighbour, lover of the girl.

SOPHRONA, old nurse of Myrrhina.

SANGARIUS,³ a slave, perhaps of Pheidias.

GORGAS, the son of Myrrhina, brother of Plangon, the daughter.

LACHES, father of the children, now husband of Myrrhina.

CHORUS, possibly consisting of the group of hunters mentioned in FRAGMENTUM SABBATICUM. See below.

SCENE: the Attic deme of Ptelea (probably on the foothills of Mt. Aegaleus, opposite the south-western end of Mt. Parnes), before the houses of Laches and Pheidias.

¹ This hypothesis is inaccurate in several particulars. The children were probably exposed with birth-tokens through the agency of a nurse, not given directly to the overseer to rear. And it was not the steward who pledged the children in payment of debts, but the boy himself, when grown, undertook that he and his sister should work off the debt as servants to their unknown father and mother.

² In the MS. of Misoumenos G.-H. find the name spelled Getês.

³ Sangarius. This name, also spelled Sangas, reappears in Terence, Eunuchus, as Sanga.

Some great, big mischief; and you're taking on

You look for gyves and treadmill—plain as plain

If not, what means such frequent beating of your head?
Or why stop short and pluck your hair? Or why these groans?

DAVUS

Ah me!

GETAS

Just so. That's what it is, poor rascal, you!
Then ought you not, if you've been lucky and amassed
Some little savings, to have handed them the while
To me, that you might get them back when you've arranged
Your business? For I'm grieved, I too, along with you
Who suffer such distress.

THE HERO

DAVUS

I don't know what you mean.
That's nonsense. This affair is bad, quite different,
Wherein I'm coiled. I'm ruined, Getas, utterly!

GETAS

But how, you cursèd fool?

DAVUS

Nay, by the gods, good sir,
Curse not a lover.

GETAS

What? A lover, you?

DAVUS

I am.

GETAS

Your master gives you more than double rations, then.
A bad thing, Davus. You, perchance, are overfed.

DAVUS

'Tis somewhat with my heart that's wrong as I behold
A harmless maiden, Getas, in my station reared.

GETAS

So she's a slave?

DAVUS

Yes—partly—in a fashion—yes.
You see, Tibeius was a shepherd dwelling here
In Ptelea, though once a house-slave in his youth.

For their support, and then a second one—for times
Were hard—and then he dried up, skin and bone.

GETAS

Yes, when Your master, haply, would not give him number three?

DAVUS

Perhaps. However, when he died, this Gorgias
Secured some little cash and buried him, and then,
When he had done what custom calls for, came to us
And brought along his sister and is living here
And working off the debt.

GETAS

But Plangon, what of her?

DAVUS

She's living with my mistress. As her task she works
The wool and serves.

In the following the young Gorgias may, perhaps, be alluding to the band of hunters who are to take the rôle of chorus :

OTHER FRAGMENTS OF "THE HERO"

11.

Several fragments of the Cairo papyrus, preserved in a very mutilated condition, apparently belong to this play. The arrangement and interpretation can be only tentative. Laches, if he is assumed as one of the speakers, has now, as it would seem, returned safely from Lemnos.

Lines 1-12.—Three mutilated lines close an "Act." There follows the usual interlude of a "chorus."¹

Lines 13 ff.—Myrrhina is having a dialogue, perhaps with Laches. Plangon's affairs are discussed, and Myrrhina's own past history is disclosed.

(LACHES)²

Good Heracles! Let me talk without anyone to overhear.

After some, now unintelligible, sentences, Laches perhaps is saying:

LACHES

Explain who in the world is her mother.

MYRRHINA

They say it is the Thracian woman.

LACHES

But it isn't.

MYRRHINA

Well, who is it then?

LACHES

'Tis you, unfortunate!

MYRRHINA

What!

LACHES

Yes, clearly, you my wife, by Zeus. Crows pick you!
You're astonished?

MYRRHINA

Why—I—what things you say!

INTRODUCTION

THE titles of about ninety plays of Menander are known. Apart from the five more or less fragmentary plays of the Cairo papyrus, edited above, identified fragments have been preserved from more than eighty others which yield amounts varying from a few words only to 123 lines of an individual play. In the present volume selections are given from sixty-seven¹ of these identified comedies, arranged according to the alphabetical order of the Greek titles, and including the longer fragments which are edited in the Teubner edition and in Sudhaus's second edition as a supplement to the Cairo papyrus.

The selection has usually been determined by the intrinsic interest of the fragments themselves, although some have been included for other reasons as, for example, citations which reappear, in substance, in Terence² or in Plautus. The omitted fragments, it is believed, contain little of value except for the technical student.

The mere list of titles is instructive. Geographical rôles—such as the “Andrian,” “Boeotian,” “Carthaginian,” “Cretan,” “Cnidian,” “Ephesian,” “Messenian,” “Olynthian,” “Perinthian,” “Samian,” “Sicyonian”—indicate, over and above the intimate relations in commerce and war with the outside world, a plentiful admixture of foreign residents and a cosmopolitan outlook, notwithstanding the jealously guarded tradition which demanded Attic parentage for the begetting of lawful children.

Furthermore, although the types are conventionalized, and although the variations of plot, as has been repeatedly pointed out, are comparatively small in the New Comedy of manners, yet a recapitulation of the list of titles reflects with some completeness the characteristic elements which made up contemporary Attic society as a whole. It is Menander's merit, as remarked by Quintilian and now made clearer to us by recent finds, that he could treat special and hackneyed themes so as to portray the foibles and the virtues of other men remote in place and time.

INTRODUCTION

The repetition of the same titles by different playwrights was much in vogue in the New as in the Old Comedy. In the collection of Comic Fragments more than 250 identical titles reappear respectively in the writings of from two to eight different authors. There would doubtless be many more if we had the complete record. Among Menander's titles forty-eight were shared by him with from one to six other playwrights. In the case of some writers this may have been due to poverty of imagination, but we must remember that even the great tragedians seem to have felt a tacit challenge to recast some of the themes of their predecessors, as, for example, in the case of the "Choephoroi" of Aeschylus, followed by the "Electra" of Sophocles and of Euripides.

This quasi-standardization of titles—like the conventionalizing of types of characters—may have tended to pique rather than to dampen the interest of the audience, and to facilitate the concentration of their critical judgment upon the merits of the poets thus brought into obvious competition. In this connection it may be noted that the "Hypobolimaïos," although this title had been used by at least two of Menander's predecessors, was regarded, after his death at least, as one of his masterpieces.

THE BROTHERS

There was a like-named play by six other comic poets: Alexis the uncle of Menander, Philemon, Diphilus, Apollodorus, Hegesippus, and Euphron. Terence's play, although ascribed in the didascalia wholly to Menander, was indebted in part at least (see Prologue) to the "Companions in Death" by Diphilus. Citations from Terence are made from Sargeaunt's edition, "Loeb Classical Library."

O happy me, in that I fail to take a wife!¹

But if this is he that ruined the girl.²

A task it is to find anyone akin to a poor man. For not a single one admits that he belongs to him if he needs assistance. Quite naturally, for he expects him to be asking for something.

We absolutely must not yield to the wicked, but oppose them. Otherwise before we know it our whole life will be turned topsy-turvy.

For the poor man is craven in everything and has the suspicion that everybody looks down on him.³

(Perhaps connected with this.)

For he that is moderately well off,⁴ Lamprias, bears more unflinchingly all that brings annoyance.

THE FISHERMEN

Of fifteen citations preserved from this play the following are the more significant.

Would I do this, but only when I see my own

THE LADY OF ANDROS

Menander, by certain changes and additions, afterwards adapted this in his "Perinthia" (q.v.), and Terence drew his "Andria" from a contaminatio of the two.

THE COUSINS

'Tis nature's way that Love
Is something deaf to admonition and withal
'Tis hard to down a god or youth in argument.

A son with sense—that's happiness, but troublesome
Is the possession of a daughter to her sire.

Go in and fetch
A torch, a lamp, a lamp-stand, or what else there be,
But anyhow make light a-plenty

Heroes are bred by lands where livelihood comes hard.

THE PEPLOS BEARER or THE FLUTE GIRL

For these arrephoroi or maidens who carried the peplos and other holy things at the festival of Athena Polias see the "Lysistrata" (641 ff.) of Aristophanes.

The fragments of this play, scanty as they are, acquaint us with a considerable cast of characters.

A

..... You will not marry, if you've any sense,
And leave this life of yours. For I who speak to you Have married. Therefore I advise you: "Do not wed!"

The matter's voted and decreed. Be cast the dice!

Well then, go on. But heaven send you come off safe.
On a real sea of troubles you're embarking now—
No Libyan, no Aegean, nor Sicilian sea Where three boats out of thirty may escape from wreck—

There is no married man at all who has been saved!

MENANDER

THE FARMER

ARGUMENT:—Cleænētus, an old bachelor farmer, is living in a country deme where he continues to work like a day-labourer although owner of the farm. Years before he had (apparently) known and loved Myrrhina, from whom, however, he had separated before the birth of her daughter. She meanwhile had (apparently) married and is now a widow living in poverty. Her son, Gorgias,¹ finds employment in the country with Cleænētus. One day the old farmer, wielding his heavy two-pronged mattock, wounds himself severely, and would have died but for the really filial care of the young man. Grateful for this, Cleænētus in his convalescence questions Gorgias about his circumstances and, not connecting the mother with his own former love affair, determines to marry her daughter, Gorgias's half-sister, to relieve at the same time their poverty and his own loneliness. Myrrhina, when informed of this, is greatly perplexed, partly perhaps because she is secretly aware that Cleænētus is the girl's father (if this may be assumed), and certainly because her daughter has already had an affair with the son of their rich neighbour "X."

When the (longer) fragment begins the lover, son of "X," has been placed in an awkward position. His father, who has doubtless heard of his amour with a portionless girl, has determined to marry him at once to his own half-sister. The development of the plot is lost, but, judging from similar plots in Menander, we may assume that all difficulties were surmounted in the parts of the play now lost. Perhaps there may have been a recognition scene between Cleænētus and Myrrhina, the former marrying the latter instead of her daughter and thus giving legitimacy and a dowry to their daughter, who would thereby be enabled to marry the rich man's son. Cleænētus may also have adopted Gorgias and put him in the way of marrying "Hedeia," his new brother-in-law's half-sister.²

FRAGMENTS FROM IDENTIFIED PLAYS

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

I. With speaking parts preserved :

1. "Z," a youth, son of "X" and half-brother of Hedeia.
2. MYRRHINA, a poor widow (?), (formerly known (?) to Cleaenetus), mother of the young man (Gorgias ?) and of his half-sister, "Y," with whom "Z" is in love.
3. DAVUS, a slave of "X."
4. PHILINNA, an old woman, confidential servant of Myrrhina and nurse of her daughter.
5. GORGAS, (?) the son of Myrrhina.

II. Other characters, some of them mutes :

6. CLEAENETUS, the farmer of the title-rôle.
7. SYRUS, another slave of "X."
8. "X,"¹ a well-to-do Athenian, father of "Z."
9. HEDEIA,² half-sister of "Z," daughter of "X" and of his present wife.
10. "Y," a young girl, daughter of Myrrhina (and (?) illegitimate daughter of Cleaenetus).

SCENE : Athens (?), the house of "X," a well-to-do Athenian, on one side of the stage and that of Myrrhina on the other. The son of "X" comes out of his father's house and goes towards that of Myrrhina and stands hesitating before her door while he makes an explanatory speech. When the fragment begins he is speaking, perhaps, of his relations with the brother of his sweetheart. He has just been off on a business trip and, upon his return, finds preparations for his own wedding already in full swing.

² Hedeia, a probable conjecture by Wilamowitz.

 I was not base nor did I even think I erred about it. However, the young fellow at that time was staying in the country. Now, as it happens, there has occurred something which has ruined me while I was off in Corinth on some business. On my return at nightfall I find other nuptials under way for me, the statues of the gods receiving wreaths, my father making sacrifice within. It is my father himself who is giving away the bride—for I have a half-sister born of her whom he now has to wife. In what way I am to fight against this pressing evil, I know not. However, this is how I'm placed. I left the house without saying a word. But if I should thus desert the marriage I should be wronging my dearest Hedeia. That would be a breach of duty. And this long while now I have been hesitating to knock at this door; for I don't know whether the brother is now here at home, come back from the country. I must provide for everything. Well, I'll be off, out of the way, and I'll make plans about precisely this, how I am to escape the marriage.

And as the young fellow rehearsed them, including facts about his sister and you and your misfortunes, Cleaenetus experienced a not unusual impulse and thought that on account of the nursing he should by all means make return. So, being a lone, old man, he took a resolution. He has promised, in fact, to marry your girl. That's the head and front of my whole story. They will be here any minute now. He will go back to the country and take her with him. There will be an end to your fight with poverty—that intractable and most implacable beast, and that too in the midst of

ACT

SCENE. GORGias, PHILINNA

After a soliloquy, Gorgias knocks at Myrrhina's door and Philinna appears, saying: Who is this before our door? It is Gorgias. (GORG.) You're right, I'm no one else Then Gorgias seems to say: Philinna, call my mother out here (PHIL.) Nay, by the Twain Goddesses She seems to go on to refer to the approaching birth of the baby From the remaining fragmentary lines, 107-125, we can conjecture the sense only vaguely. Possibly Myrrhina is summoned and the situation is discussed. Probably Gorgias brings the proposition of marriage from Cleaenetus.

OTHER FRAGMENTS

(CLEAENETUS?)

I am a country boor, even I will not deny it, and I am not perfectly acquainted with city ways, but time keeps improving my knowledge.

(CLEAENETUS (?) to (?) the son of Myrrhina)

Now he, whoever he is that has wronged you in your poverty, is possessed by an evil genius in committing this injustice of which perhaps he'll have his share. For even if he's very wealthy, he wantons insecurely. Yes, for Fortune's current is swift to change its course.

(CLEAENETUS (?) to Gorgias the son of Myrrhina)

'Tis easy, Gorgias, to despise a poor man, even if he says what's very just; for his words are thought to spring from this alone—the wish for gain. And forthwith the man with old, worn cloak is named a blackmailer, even though it happens he's the one that's wronged.

(CLEAENETUS (?) to Gorgias)

That man, Gorgias, is most masterful who with self-mastery knows how to bear the greatest wrongs, but this sharp-tempered, bitter spirit is forthwith to all a demonstration of pettiness of soul.

(DAVUS (?) or "x" (?) to the son of "x")

What, thunderstruck, you fool? It's laughable! When you've fallen in love with a free-born maid you're tongue-tied and you ignore the nuptials, made for you in vain.

THE RING

A finger-ring not seldom plays an important part in the unravelling of the plot. Compare, for example, "The Arbitrants."

And then forthwith¹ the misguided one said this, that he would not be glad to give a daughter in marriage, nay, not if he had fifty maidens.

A self-provisioning bridegroom we have found, who stands in no need of a dowry.

THE SUPERSTITIOUS MAN

Menander's skill in character-drawing has often suggested his indebtedness to the influence of Theophrastus, who, according to common tradition, had the poet among his two thousand pupils. The title of this play recalls specifically one of the "Characters" of Theophrastus and re-enforces, as being good Attic, this meaning of the Greek word, which has sometimes been erroneously relegated to later Greek.

(A)

Now may some blessing be mine, O highly honoured gods! For as I was fastening on my sandals, I broke the strap of the right²-hand one.

(B)

Naturally, you babbling fool, for it was rotten, and you out of stinginess were unwilling to buy new shoes.

For one ought not to treat one's house-slaves unjustly, and especially when they make some blunder with kind intent, not out of rascality. No, for such treatment is very disgraceful.³

Take, for example, the Syrians. Whenever they eat fish, by a kind of incontinence their feet and belly swell up; they put on sackcloth and then go and seat themselves on a dung-heap by the wayside and propitiate the goddess by excessive self-humiliation.¹

THE BRIDAL MANAGER

(A) Slave, what now? For you've come forth, by Zeus, with bustling serviceableness! (B) Yes, for we concoct concoctions. Aye, the night through we were sleepless, and even yet there's very much unfinished on our hands.

Blessed is the man who has both mind and money, for he employs the latter well for what he should.

THE GIRL TWINS

Why, you'll be promenading with me clad in a coarse cloak just as on a time the wife of the Cynic Crates walked with him.

And he married off a daughter, giving her, as he said himself, for a trial marriage of thirty days.

FRAGMENTS FROM IDENTIFIED PLAYS

THE DOUBLE DECEIVER

The plot of this play may, perhaps, be inferred from the "Bacchides" of Plautus, where, indeed, the line so often cited (see No. 125) is repeated verbatim.

Counsellor-like you anticipated our eyes, Demeas! ¹

Stand by me. I will knock at the door and call some one of them.

"Quem di diligunt adolescens moritur."—PLAUTUS, Bacch. 4, 7, 18.

The man dies young on whom the gods their love bestow. ²

THE PEEVISH MAN

The loss of this play is the more to be regretted as the scene seems to have been laid in the deme of Phyle, embracing the site of the historical fortress and of the Sanctuary of the Nymphs in the gorge beyond the convent of "Our Lady of the Defile." The name of the "Peevish Man," it would seem, was Smicrines (a type known from "The Arbitrants" and recurring in "The Shield"), so miserly in character that he actually "feared lest the smoke should carry off some of his property" through the smoke-vent. ³

PAN (?)

(addressing the spectators ⁴ and speaking the prologue)

Please assume that this place is Phyle in Attica, and that the Nymphaeum from which I come forth is that of the Phyle-folk.

You babble about money, a matter insecure. For if you have knowledge that this will abide with you for ever, keep it close and share with none, but be yourself its lord and master. Whereas if you possess all this, not as your own but Fortune's, why should you, father, begrudge it to anyone of these? For

She herself, perhaps, taking all this away from you, will bestow it in turn on someone else who is unworthy. Wherefore I say that you yourself, what time you are the master, ought to use this nobly, father, ought to succour all and through your help effect that as many as possible should live in easy circumstances. For this is something that will never die, and, if reverses some day befall you, from this source you in turn will have the self-same help. A visible friend is a better thing by far than wealth which you keep buried out of sight.

Look at their mode of offering sacrifices, the burglars that they are. They bring chests and wine-jars, not for the gods' sake but their own. The frankincense is a pious thing, and the god receives this cake placed whole upon the fire, while they, after adding in for the gods the tip of the loin, the gall, and the inedible bones, always gulp down the rest themselves.

The Cook Rules the Roast.

No single person ever made escape scot-free after unrighteous treatment of a cook. Our guild is somehow sacrosanct.

FRAGMENTS FROM IDENTIFIED PLAYS

THE SELF-TORMENTOR

Confirmation (now increased by Demianczuk's addition, see below) that Terence's like-named play (see Prologue) was taken from Menander's may be drawn from the following fragments.

SCENE: The deme of Halae (Aexonides (?) adjoining the deme Halimus, or, possibly, of Halae Araphenides).

How now, by Athena? Are you cracked, although so well along in years? For in round numbers you are sixty or even more. And of the Halae folk you are the owner of a bit of land the fairest, by Zeus, amongst the three¹ at least, and, best of all, unmarked by mortgage stone.²

With utter devotion to her toil she³ clung to her loom. An old woman was spinning thread and there was one handmaiden. She, in squalid condition, was weaving with her.⁴

A man's character discovers itself in his speech.⁵

He who is truly happy should remain at home and remain free or else should cease to live.

¹ The three: this (now obscure) item is omitted by Terence. See note on text.

² Greek mortgages were recorded, in situ, on stelae.

³ She = the mistress.

⁴ cf. Terence, Self-Tormentor, 291-294. While the old woman was spinning the thread, presently to become the woof, the mistress and maid were engaged at the loom (E. K. Rand.)

THE WOMAN WHO IS SET ON FIRE¹

. . . . Now may he perish, root and branch, whoever was the first to marry, and then the second one, and next the third, and then the fourth, and then the last one on the list.

For there are three ways, master, through which all things come to pass: either by the laws, or by necessity, or, third, by some custom.

This thing on which you pride yourself the most—this thinking you are somebody—will ruin you. For it has ruined countless others.

THE PROMISER

If you exalt your low estate, it will seem fair to outsiders, my friend. But if you of your own motion make it lowly and hold it as of no worth, this is considered as home-made self-ridicule.

In the hour of calculation the daring plans of mobs are set forth with difficulty, but when the time for action comes, if the occasion is carefully selected, they hit on unexpected ways and means.

For to shameless propositions this is helpful, this alone: if one brings them swift to issue and selects occasion well.

THE HEIRESS

This was one of the six plays praised by Quintilian (10. 1. 70). The plot of Terence's "Phormio" may, perhaps, give suggestions for reconstructing this. Menander wrote two editions.

Surely of all things insomnia is most provocative of talking. Anyhow it has roused me up and brings me out here to speak forth my whole autobiography from the beginning.

The Mutes in Life's Chorus.

Just as in choruses not everyone doth sing,
But certain two or three mere numbered dummies stand

Last in the rows, so here 'tis somehow similar :
These fill a space, while these who have life's fulness—live !

Either a man ought to live single or die when once he is father of children, so bitter is life's sequel.

What blessing could a corpse possess, seeing that we who live have not a single one ?

THE EUNUCH

In the didascalía of Terence's like-named play Menander's "Eunouchos" is cited as the original, the names of the characters being changed.

Fight not against the gods nor add to the affair new tempests. Endure the necessary ones.¹

This old man is a spotted lizard.²

² i.e. "blotched with freckles" not a tortoise-shell cat ! as one might infer from Terence, Eun. 688, 689, who translates : "weazel." L. and S. sub voce, incorporate his mistake.

All things that we would fain secure call for brooding thought, as the sages say.

Now no god bulges your bosom's fold with coin, but, if haply well-disposed, he offers some resource and shows some opening to attain to wealth. And if you let this slip, no longer blame a god but, from this time on, quarrel with your own yoke-mate, weakness.

A noble rooster¹ exists on special diet, while the cock of low degree actually lives in fear of his superior. A human being, even if he is good, high-bred, very nobly-born, gets no good of that in this present day and generation! IEPEIA

In vol. x, No. 1235, "Oxyrhynchus Papyri" (q.v.), are preserved considerable remains of three consecutive columns from a work containing, apparently in alphabetical³ order, the arguments and opening words of Menander's comedies. These fragments contain: first, some unintelligible verse-ends from a play alphabetically³ preceding the 'Ιερεία; next, probably the opening words (now illegible) and the argument of the 'Ιερεία; and, finally, the opening words and the (incomplete) argument of the 'Ιμβριοι.

FRAGMENTS FROM IDENTIFIED PLAYS

To this play and in this connection is to be referred the following :

It is something strenuous to take the plunge into a family dinner-party where the paterfamilias, with cup in hand, first leads off the speech-making, interlarding jest and admonition ; then the mother second ; next a grandmother puts in her chatter ; then an old man, father of the maternal aunt, with deep, bass voice ; and then an old gammer who calls the young man "dearest." The latter has to nod assent to all of these.

THE PRIESTESS

The plot is concerned with the discovery of a lost relationship. An old man (apparently formerly the husband of the priestess) had lost his son and had been separated from his wife. The boy had been brought up as their own by some neighbours along with their genuine son. The Oxyrhynchus Argument yields¹ the following data : "The former husband of the priestess . . . having recovered tried to seek out the son whom he loved. His servant was persuaded to be brought to the priestess under pretence of being possessed,² in order that he might be accorded treatment ; and he secretly obtained information and discovered the truth. The true son of the mother of the supposititious child desiring to marry the daughter of the priestess sent his mother to speak with the priestess about him. While the women were talking [the old man, who] had become suspicious, and especially in consequence of the information of his servant that there was a difference in personal appearance, addresses the younger of his neighbour's sons as his own. The youth discerning his mistake intimidates his brother in advance by saying that the old man was mad and was declaring every young man to be his son. Accordingly when the old man subsequently learned the truth and addressed the older as his son the latter sends him away as being mad. At the same time . . . the old man having recovered his son marries the priestess, and the son receives the daughter of the priestess whom he had loved, and the marriages of all three pairs are celebrated. . . . Such are the incidents of the plot. The play is one of the best and . . ."

THE IMBRIANS

The opening words and a few lines of the plot are preserved in the Oxyrhynchus argument (see above, p. 362), enough to identify the meaning of the title. We read (in Oxyr. pap. 1235, lines 103-121): "This is the beginning of 'The Imbrians':

"For how long a time, Demeas, I . . .

The play was subsequently acted by the Athenian Calippus. The plot is as follows: Two poor men who were friends lived in close association at Imbros and married twin-sisters; and sharing all their possessions too they worked industriously both on land and sea. . . ."

There is nothing greater, father, in man's nature than reasoning power. By the rational disposition of affairs each man is according to character a ruler, a general, a popular leader, or, again, a councillor. He who excels in reasoning power controls all.

insertion here of the vigorous apostrophe to a "Rhode" in fragm. 546 (see p. 491), but the mere recurrence of a proper name is insufficient evidence.

THE CARIAN WAILING-WOMAN

In the first fragment preserved we have an apotheosis of Effrontery like that of Misapprehension in the postponed prologue of the "Periceirromene." She is a more vigorous sister to personified Persuasion, addressed by Abrotonon in the "Arbitrants." The personification was canonical, for in the Court of the Areopagos the accuser stood on the "Stone of Shamelessness" (λίθος Ἀναιδέας), while the defendant, accused of homicide, stood on the "Stone of Outrage" (λίθος Ὑβρεως).

O thou who now art chief amongst the gods, O Effrontery, if it is right to name thee god—and it is right, for now-a-days the thing that sways is deemed a god—to what lengths thou dost go and what a goal, methinks, thou'lt reach!

THE CITHARA PLAYER

To nine fragments previously known are now prefixed, with some hesitation,¹ 101 lines from a Berlin papyrus, of which more than a third are more or less complete.

A few particulars of the plot can be gathered. A young man while away from Athens in Asia Minor has fallen in love with, and apparently already married, a rich woman, daughter of his father's neighbour, Phantias, a cithara virtuoso. The young man has just returned to Athens and is expecting his bride by another ship. Her non-arrival is causing him anxiety. In the past he has led his own life and eluded companionship with his father. Now he wishes to obtain his consent to the marriage and seeks an interview with him. The father, Laches (?), arrives from the country wondering that his son is, for once, eager to see him. In the lost scenes the father's reasons for opposing the match were doubtless developed as well as the circumstances—including the unexpected wealth of the bride—by which a happy outcome is effected. In fragments Nos. 285, 286 K there seem to be contained stings at Phantias, the harp-player.

There were apparently two houses represented in the scene, one the town house of Laches and his son, the other that of their neighbour, Phantias.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

The Berlin MS. opens with some 34 mutilated lines from the beginning of the play. In these someone is apparently conversing with a woman about his love affair. In column II. a young man, perhaps the same person as the speaker above, tells a friend about his marriage with a rich Greek maiden. The context is lost.

MOSCHION (?).—I consider that all these things and all my own personal property belong to her. She was both free-born and of a Greek city. And all this I acquired by the kindness of Fortune. No brothel-keeper must entrap me

A.—What is it, then, that troubles you? And why didn't you bring the woman and her property here?

MOSCHION.—I do not know where in the world she is. She has not arrived, not yet at least, although the time that has elapsed is now long. I am thinking everything over; I fear that some mischance has occurred on the sea or rocky shores.

A.—You mean lest through inexperience——

MOSCHION.—I do not know. I am discouraged and fear exceedingly.

A.—It's likely something is the matter.

MOSCHION.—Well, going on like this towards the market-place along with me you shall hear the rest of the facts and give me advice about them.

A.—There is nothing to prevent me.

MOSCHION (to his slaves).—Let someone take these things into the house out of sight as quickly as possible.

SCENE. ? LACHES (alone)

And now what in the world may this mean? For he is not acting at all according to his own habit! Moschion summons me from the country, he who on other occasions used to run off to the country if I happened to be here, whereas if I went out there, he'd come back here and go to drinking. And he acted very rationally. There was no father by to criticise him! Yet I did not admonish in anger; for even I myself was one of those who are capable of diminishing one's means. In this at least my wife is not to blame: the boy takes after me. Anyhow he does naught that's good. I must go in to see if he's here. But if he does not happen to be in the house I shall go on at once to the market-place, for I shall find him somewhere yonder, I suppose, near "Hermes' Row."

The same to you. Now what is it that you wish to say to me, my son?

(In the broken lines 75-91, the son and father seem to converse, about as follows:)

(MOSCHION) I did not tell you forthwith—but I must play the man. . . . You've frequently been very urgent about many matches . . . you wished me to marry . . . for, as you said, this is a matter that calls for much intelligence.

(LACHES) Moschion, I am ready . . . one whom you ought to marry . . . a free-born girl. This is by far the first consideration and only according to reason, if she is absolutely beyond criticism in her pedigree. . . . For if you ask me to act as adviser in the matter of marriage, making up an individual opinion

(MOSCHION) Now hear the rest, I will tell you concisely. Arrived at Ephesus I fell (in with) . . . For then there was solemn procession of free-born virgins, bringing meat-offerings to Artemis¹ of the Ephesians. I saw there a maiden, daughter of Phantias of the Euonymeus² clan.

LACHES

What! Are there any Euonymeuses even out there in Ephesus?

OTHER FRAGMENTS

I used to think, Phantias, that the wealthy, who can live without borrowing money, do not groan o'nights nor even toss up and down exclaiming, "Oh, me," but that they have a pleasant and tranquil sleep, whereas such evils as these belong to beggars. But now I see that you, the so-called happy ones, have suffering corresponding to our own. In truth grief and life are in a certain way akin. Grief consorts with a life of luxury; it inheres in a life of high repute; it grows old along with a life of straitened circumstances.

It is the most unsubstantial of all evils that is stinging thee, namely poverty. For what is this poverty of which a single friend might be the physician by lightly bringing aid?

If, father, we are going to shun those who have been wronged, to what other persons would we readily bring aid?

For, Laches, I consider that it is a habit befitting the urbane life to learn thoroughly the lesson of doing nothing that is unjust.

MENANDER

ΚΟΛΑΞ

Terence, in his prologue to the "Eunuchus" (l. 30 ff.), makes specific acknowledgment of his obligation to this play of Menander for the characters of the flatterer-parasite and of the boastful soldier. In Terence's play the flatterer is Gnatho, while in Menander's play two of these flatterers or parasites are found, Gnatho and Struthias, both of these being stock-names¹ for the type. In Terence the boastful soldier is Thraso; in this play, Bias. Menander develops a somewhat different type in the character of Polemon in the "Periceironmene," and Thrasonides in "The Hated Man." All four of these are nomina ad sensum.

From the 130-140? lines preserved, some of them hopelessly mutilated, only a few features of the Comedy can be inferred. Terence's obligations to the two plays of Menander, the "Colax" (Toady) and the "Eunuchus" respectively, cannot now be definitely determined.

SCENE. PHEIDIAS (alone)

Pheidias states, apparently in monologue, that his father has gone away from home on some business, leaving him in an empty house. A young girl is referred to. He apostrophizes himself as "unlucky," and debates as to his line of action. At line 9 he apparently takes a resolution: "This must I do. Our tribal festival is going on here—for it is the Fourth. . . ." Then there is, apparently, a reference to the "public host, master of the feast."

(Lacuna of some lines.)

² In the Oxyr. pap. iii. pp. 17-24, were published 91 lines. From additional fragments published (Oxyr. pap. x. No. 1237) it is now known, as was before suspected, that the fragments in vol. iii. contain parts of scenes rather than continuous matter. See text below at lines 13, 52, and 70.

³ Struthias is apparently the flatterer or toady of the title-rôle. See fragm. 293 K below.

Davus refers to Gnatho, the parasite. SCENE. DAVUS (GNATHO?), PHEIDIAS

DAVUS.—There is one man through whom, my young master, everything is ruined utterly. I say my say to you. As many cities as you have seen subverted, their ruin has been merely this which, now, thanks to him, I have discovered. All tyrants whatsoever, every great leader, satrap, garrison commander, founder of a colony, general—nay, but I mean all those who have fallen utterly in our time—these, these alone, the flatterers have destroyed. These are their cause of misery.

PHEIDIAS.—Your argument is imposing. But I for my part don't know what the point is.

(DAVUS).—Anyone by error of judgment might think that the one who is plotting against you is well disposed.

(PHEIDIAS).—Even if he lacks power?

(DAVUS).—Everyone has power to do evil.

But there is no price for immortality, not even if you get together those storied talents of Tantalus. Nay, you shall die and leave these things to others. What am I saying, then? How we do chatter, men thrice wretched that we are,
Yes, all of us, so much puffed up about ourselves!

But when he opens his front door, thrice luckless one,
A woman rules supreme, gives orders, bickers on
And on. His griefs are more and many. None

DRUNKENNESS

Do we not fare, then, as befits our method of offering sacrifice? Where, for example, I bring to the gods a scrawny sheep,³ costing scarcely ten drachmas,⁴ while the flute-girls and scented oil and harp-girls, wine of Mende or Thasos, eels, cheese, and honey cost all but a talent; and where by analogy it is reasonable for us to receive (only) ten drachmas' worth of blessing even in the event that our sacrifice to the gods is auspicious, while in the reverse case it is reasonable for us to balance against this the loss accruing from these—how is not the evil from the sacrifices duplicated?⁵ I, at any rate, if I were the god, would never have allowed anyone to put the loin on the altar unless along with it he were dedicating the eel⁶ in order to have secured the death of Callimedon, one of his kinsmen.

Consider these points whenever you are vexed by some everyday matter, for, if you do, you will put up with everything. Whereas, if you are forever picking out the annoying circumstances, without balancing against them any of the things you may hope for, you will be forever tormented.

THE HATED MAN

(To thirteen short fragments, previously known, is now added a longer one ("Oxyr. Papyri," No. 1013, VII. 103) containing some fifty mutilated lines. It is possible to see in them a pendant to the plot of "The Girl Who Gets Her Hair Cut Short." A jealous soldier, Thrasonides, falls in love with his captive maid, Crateia; quarrels with her and then wishes ardently for a reconciliation. There seems to be a young rival, Cleinias,¹ perhaps a double of Moschion. Demeas, father of Crateia, arrives and frees his daughter.)

THE GIRL FROM PERINTHUS

Terence's "Andria" is avowedly a "contaminatio" of Menander's "Perinthian Woman" and his "Andria," the latter being itself a recasting by the author of the earlier play. From the commentary of Donatus we learn that the first scene of the "Perinthia" of Menander and of the "Andria" of Terence were almost identical. In this scene in the "Perinthia" an old man is talking with his wife, but in Terence's "Andria" with a freedman, Sosias. In Menander's "Andria," on the other hand, the old man was alone. Other details also in Terence's "Andria" followed more closely the "Andria" of Menander. Thus the preparations for torturing Davus by fire in the "Perinthia" are much toned down in Terence, and the bibulous midwife in Menander's "Andria" (see Kock's fragments 41 and 42, cited above) proved to be better than her reputation, as is the case with Terence's Lesbia (see "Andria," 228 ff. and 481 ff.).¹ But this may have been the same also in the missing sequel of the "Perinthia." The more recently discovered fragments ("Ox. pap." vol. vi. p. 150 ff.) give a scene of some twenty lines, nearly intact, supplementing the nine short fragments previously known. Of these latter, three must certainly precede the longer fragment; the order of the others is uncertain. In the lines preserved no mention is made of the girl from Perinthus who, like the Samian girl, gives the title to the Comedy. It may be inferred, however, that in Perinthus, the city on the Propontis, the girl had been left as a child and that her real Athenian provenance was ultimately discovered by some happy accident, as in the case of the girl from Andros, or in that of the Samian girl. The vivid scene where the slave is threatened with burning throws rather a lurid light on the power of the master over the slave. The actual burning is, of course, not consummated, but, even if it was the master's intent merely to frighten his erring slave, Davus gives no intimation that Laches is exceeding his rights. No parallel exists in Greek Comedy except the threatened holocaust of Mnesilochus—a free man!—in the “Thesmophorizusae” of Aristophanes.¹ Terence (“Andria,” 860) tones this down to ordinary torture and fetters, probably following Menander’s “Andria.”

DAVUS

He'll come out bringing brush-wood and the kindling and fire. That's sure. O Tibeius and Getas! And then he'll burn me up. Would you abandon me—you, Getas, especially—me your fellow-slave who saved you? Surely not. You'd not abandon me. Nay, are you going to let me suffer? Is that the way we stand towards each other? Here comes Pyrrhias bringing a load, the biggest ever! I'm done for! And Laches himself follows with a lighted torch.

LACHES (giving orders)

Put the wood around him quickly. Now, Davus, make an exhibit of your rascality by finding some device and making good your escape from me, from here.

DAVUS

I! A device?

LACHES

Yes, Davus, for this cheating "an easy-going, empty-headed master"¹ is a fool's business.

DAVUS

(as Laches, perhaps, hands the torch to a slave)

Oh! Look!

LACHES

Nay, if someone (could sap²) your heart drop by drop—You were troubled, were you?

DAVUS

Master, this is not like you.

¹ The exact meaning of the aposiopesis is uncertain. G. and H., taking the word in the very late sense "ashes," translate: "LACHES: But if one feels his brain turning to ashes—were you hurt? DAVUS: Not by you, master."

THE NECKLACE

(The misery attendant upon marrying a rich wife is a familiar quarry for the comic poets. Compare, for example, "The Heiress.")

This fine heiress is likely now to sleep at ease on either cheek! A great and notorious deed has now been accomplished. Out of the house she has cast the irksome woman whom she wished to banish, so that all may fix their eyes on the face of Crobyle—and that she may be recognized as my wife, the mistress of the house—even that face which she won as her own, an ass among apes, as the saying goes. I prefer to keep silence about the night, which was the primal cause of many evils. Ah, me! To think that I took Crobyle to wife with her sixteen talents dowry¹ and her nose a cubit long! Now is this insolence in any wise to be endured? No, by Zeus the Olympian, by Athena, not at all! But this servant wench must be led off quicker than one can speak. Now then, let someone lead in here a second as her substitute!²

I have to wife a Lamia,³ an heiress. Have I not told you this? Have I not, really? We have her,

B

You tell of an affair where resistance is in vain.

I know it well.

O thrice unlucky he who though poor marries and begets children. How irrational is a man who has neither taken precaution for necessities, nor, if he meet with misfortune in the common events of life, would be able to cloke this with money, but lives storm-tossed in the midst of an unsheltered life of hardship, with his share of all distresses but no share of blessings! For I, though suffering for one alone, admonish all.

Obey Crobyle, your mother, and marry your kinswoman.

PARMENON (?)

Whoever wishes, though a poor man, to live in the city is desirous of making himself still more despondent. For whenever he turns his eyes upon the luxurious man who is able to live at his ease, then it is possible for him to see what a life of wretched hardship is his own.

Our master has counselled very badly. For while he lived in the country, he, as belonging to the class that has no definite position, was not open to much criticism but was curtained off by solitude.

PARMENON (?)

Surely the country is for all men a teacher of virtue and of the freeman's life.

"Every Rose conceals a Thorn."

There is no blessing, Parmenon, in life that springs like tree from single root, but near to blessing, and beside it, grows up evil too; and nature from the evil brings forth good.

Chase ever from thy life what brings annoy. The span of life we live is something brief, the time is scant.

It is impossible to discover anyone whose life is immune from trouble.

(To the two fragments previously identified from this play may now be added one from the "Supplementum Comicum" (Demianczuk, p. 58)).

Fare on in your unbridled course and keep on doing this which now you do, since it's permitted you to spend your time bursting with countless good things, battenning on food by night and day.

Why, O wretch, laying your burden down, are you still standing by the door? We've taken into our house a mere bread-consumer, miserable and useless!

this man for a small part of a day I am now his well-wisher. To this some one of the sages might certainly say, "Eloquence is a persuasive thing." Why, then, do I feel a loathing for the others who talk well? It's the character of the speaker that does the persuading, not eloquence. For eloquent speech, if it entail damage, is something dire.

That man, O Parmenon, I count most fortunate Who quickly whence he came returns, when he, unvexed,

Has looked on these majestic sights—the common sun,
Water and clouds, the stars and fire. If thou shalt live
An hundred years, or very few, thou'lt always see These same sights present, grander ones thou'lt ne'er behold.

So count this time I speak of as some festival
Or city visit where one sees the market-place,
The crowd, the thieves, the dice, the loungers at the clubs,

Then, if thou'rt off betimes unto thy lodging-place,
Thou go'st with fuller purse and none thine enemy,
While he that tarries longer, worn, his money gone,
Grows old and wretched and forever knows some lack,
A vagrant he, the sport of enemies and plots.
Gaining no easy death the transient guest² returns.

"Fortune holds the helm."

Have done with talking of intellect; for the human intellect amounts to nothing, while Fortune's—whether we call it divine spirit or intellect—this is what steers all and veers and saves, whereas mortal forethought is smoke and nonsense. Take my advice and you'll not blame me: everything that we think or say or do is Fortune, and we are but countersigners . . . Fortune ever holds the tiller. This goddess alone we ought to speak of as both intellect and forethought unless we perversely take pleasure in empty names.

"The woman should follow, not lead, through life."

Woman should always take the second place in speaking and the man should take the lead in all. For there is never a household, wherein a woman holds first place in all things, which does not go to utter ruin.

This only, the possession of much wealth, casts a veil over both ignoble birth and wicked character and all the ills that man is heir to, but all else has the veil withdrawn.

Anyone who decides that forethought is not responsible for every blessing would have, I think, a correct opinion; nay, there are times when mere chance is useful.

'Tis always best to tell the truth. At every crisis I recommend this as a chief contribution to security in life.

MENANDER

THE GHOST

Terence, in the prologue to his "Eunuchus," while making one of his chronic attacks upon his rival Luscius Lavinius, says that the latter has ruined "The Ghost" of Menander in spite of his careful translation from Greek. Donatus, in his commentary upon this passage (Ter. "Eun." prol. 9), gives a brief summary of the plot of "The Ghost." In substance he says: A young man has a stepmother who, before she married his father, has had by a neighbour a daughter. The maiden, whom she wishes to have continually near her, is brought up secretly in the adjoining house, and the party wall between the neighbour's and her husband's house is pierced by a passage with its entrance made to resemble a shrine which she covers with garlands and boughs. Under the pretext of ritual performances she is able to enjoy regular visits from her daughter. The young woman, however, is seen by the stepson, who at first is terrified, as he takes the maiden for a ghost. Further encounters change terror into love, and a happy marriage is arranged with the consent of all parties concerned.

This commentary has made possible the identification of certain fragments. On a strip of parchment in the Imperial Public Library of Petrograd¹ Jernstedt recognized in 1891 portions of "The Ghost" (Phasma) of Menander. The two sides of the strip yield fifty incomplete but fairly intelligible lines. Eighteen of the verses had been previously published with the addition of another overlapping fragment of seven lines, and were included (see Kock, "Comic. Attic. Fragmenta," No. 530) among Menander's unidentified fragments. Thus there are now fifty-six nearly consecutive lines and one other fragment of two lines known to be from this comedy.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

1. A FAMILY DIVINITY (doubtless connected with the ritual at the sham shrine). Perhaps, after a dialogue with Pheidias and his exit at line 8, this divinity in one of Menander's belated¹ prologues explains the situation to the audience (cf. 1. 19).²
2. PHEIDIAS, the stepson.
3. A SERVANT (a Freedman) or PAEDAGOGUS.
4. THE GHOST (i.e. the stepmother's daughter).
5. A COOK (in fragm. 501 K).

SCENE: Athens (?). Two adjoining houses with a concealed communicating passage.

The feast of the coppersmiths, including other artisans as well, was celebrated on the last day of the month Pyanepsion (Oct.-Nov.), in honour of the divine smith, Hephaestus, and still finds an echo in the ringing hammers of Hephaestus Street in modern Athens.

There could not be anything more wretched than an old man in love, except yet another old man in love. For how can he fail to be wretched who wishes to enjoy what age deprives him of?

Do serve up some time to-day! It is not a case of preparing Lydian entrées, nor even such sauces as you are wont to mix up, of honey, flour and eggs, for now it is altogether the reverse. For the cook makes moulds, bakes flat cakes, boils groats and serves them after the smoked fish, and then a cheese-omelette and grapes. But the woman cook, arrayed as rival, roasts bits of meat and thrushes as if for dessert, and thereupon the banqueter nibbles away at them and, after anointing and decking himself with a wreath, settles down again to dine on the thrushes as if honey-cakes.

AN UNIDENTIFIED COMEDY

AN UNIDENTIFIED COMEDY

Four fragments, preserved in the Cairo papyrus and now connected as belonging to one comedy, yield provisionally the following outline. There are two youths, Moschion and Chaereas. The latter is betrothed to the daughter of Cleaenetus, with whom, however, Moschion is in love. Chaereas, thinking, or feigning, that her father wishes him to marry her, poses as unwilling to yield her to Moschion and to marry Moschion's sister as proposed. Moschion, meanwhile, has begotten a child by her and marries her with her father's consent and, apparently, with the connivance of Chaereas. When the misunderstanding has been cleared up, Chaereas probably marries the sister of Moschion.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

LACHES, an old man, father of Moschion.

CHAEREAS, a young man, jilted by the daughter of Cleaenetus.

CLEAENETUS, an old man, father-in-law of Moschion.

(MOSCHION, son of Laches.)

The papyrus begins with ten broken lines, containing dialogue apparently between Laches and Chaereas. At line 8, Laches, informed by Chaereas of Moschion's love affair, apostrophizes his son. Chaereas, line 10 ff., complains of Moschion for depriving him of his promised bride, the daughter of Cleaenetus. Laches refers to what he has apparently already proposed, a consolation marriage between his own daughter and Chaereas. Cleaenetus and Chaereas seem to be acting together, for some reason not altogether clear, behind Laches's back. Chaereas, in collusion with Cleaenetus, has been entrusted with preparing Laches for subsequent developments. Cleaenetus, who presently appears, pretends to be utterly indignant at Moschion. Chaereas plays the rôle of reluctantly giving up his promised bride and of helping Laches to calm down the assumed indignation of Cleaenetus.

(The first fragment begins with ten broken verses.)

Am I to urge, when wronged myself, to give away
My bride ?

For my sake, patience.

CHAEREAS

You put me, Laches, to the blush.

CHAEREAS (according to plan)

Now hear me. Moschion has carried off the maid, Cleaenetus. He has her.

CLEAENETUS

We are wronged! We're wronged!

CHAEREAS

Stop bawling. Now his father, Laches, present here,
For lawful child-begetting,¹ ratifies this bond.

(Turning to Laches)

Do you assent to that?

LACHES

Yes, Chaereas, I do.

CLEAENETUS

30 No word I'd urge against it, by the gods, not I.

A lacuna of five lines. In these and the eleven broken lines that follow Chaereas overcomes his pretended reluctance to give up the daughter of Cleaenetus and is praised by Laches for his magnanimity. Laches apparently gladly accepts the solution and is himself praised for being so mild-mannered. It is agreed that there need be no further vexation felt. Only later does Laches perceive that he has been made the victim of a benevolent plot.

LACHES (to Chaereas)

44 You are not harsh with us, in fact you're very mild.
I see you're vexed no whit.

CHAEREAS

And I see you the same.

LACHES

And why should I be vexed? There is no cause, not one.

I'm off now to my son to set his mind at rest
From what he feared so much but now.

SELECTIONS FROM UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

INTRODUCTION

About six hundred fragments, varying in length from one word to some eighteen verses, from plays whose titles are not known, are handed down in citations from antiquity. Of these some fifty are attributed with doubt to Menander.

The fragments (about 220¹) selected for this volume cover, it is believed, what will be most useful, by way of supplement to the material preserved from identified plays, in forming an estimate of Menander.

For convenience of identification the numbering given by Kock (Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, Vol. III.) is retained.

The selections illustrate the quotable, sententious character of Menander's writing, and often throw light upon some detail of Greek life. Detached sentiments, however, may often be misleading, and only the missing context would show whether the thought was mock-sententious or to be taken seriously. Obviously many sentiments are not to be ascribed to the author himself; but, on the other hand, lofty thoughts put, for example, in a slave's mouth, may well represent Menander's own attitude towards the best ethical sentiment current in the Athens of his day. The tragic colouring of certain passages, which older commentators found difficulty in reconciling with genuine Menandrian Comedy, is abundantly justified now that we have connected scenes in the approximately complete plays of the Cairo papyrus.

¹ Fragments now identified as belonging to the newly discovered plays are included in their proper place.

INTRODUCTION

The text, with exceptions noted, is based upon the editions of Kock and Meineke, to which the reader is referred for further critical notes.

Meineke adds, with hesitation, under the name of Menander seven hundred and fifty-eight gnomic lines arranged in alphabetical order. These are of mixed or doubtful provenance.

SELECTIONS FROM UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

The Common Lot.

If you, young master, when your mother gave you birth, were born the only one of all mortals who could do forever what you please and always be prosperous, and if some one of the gods made with you this agreement, you do well to be indignant ; for he has played you false and done a monstrous thing. But if you, under just the same conditions as all of us, breathe this common air of heaven—to employ a phrase that rather smacks of tragedy—then you must bear this better ; you must use your reason. Nay, to sum up the whole argument, you are a human being, than which no living creature suffers more sudden change—now to high estate and then again to humiliation. And very justly. For, although by nature it's exceeding weak, it is steward over vast affairs and, whenever it has a fall, brings down with it very many noble things. But you, young master, have not lost blessings that exceed all measure, and these your present ills are of the average kind. In the future, therefore, strike an average somehow and endure.

UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

*No such Ass as Man.*¹

All living beings are most blessed and are possessed of sense much more than man. For example, take this jackass here. His lot is luckless, as is generally agreed. For him no evils come through himself, but he has only those which Nature has imposed upon him. Whereas we, apart from necessary evils, ourselves through ourselves contrive others in addition. Let someone sneeze and we're perturbed; let someone revile us and we're vexed; if someone sees a vision we are greatly frightened; hoots an owl, we are filled with fear. Contentions, reputations, ambitious rivalries, and laws—these evils have all been added to those that Nature gives.

Inevitable Eve.

Now is it not just that they depict Prometheus riveted fast upon the crags, and that he has a torch-race in his honour, but not one single benefit besides? He moulded women, O ye right reverend gods!—an abominable caste, hated of all the gods, methinks. Is some man bent on marrying? On marrying? In the sequel evil passions lurk unseen—a paramour who wantons in the marriage-bed; and poisons; and envy, most grim of all diseases—all these are lurking for him with whom a woman is to live his whole life through.

"Ut vidi, ut perii!"

By Athena, gentlemen, I cannot hit upon a figure that will match what has actually occurred, as I turn over with myself what brings me swift to ruin. For instance, a cyclone, while it gathers strength, comes on; it strikes; whirls off; an age goes by. Or on the sea when billows clash: there's breathing space to cry "Zeus Saviour!" The Almighty Dollar.

Epicharmus claims as gods Winds, Water, Earth, Sun, Fire, and Stars, whereas it were my thought that Gold and Silver are for us the useful gods. Just dedicate their shrines within your house and say your prayers. What do you wish for? All things shall be yours: estate and houses, servants, silver-plate, friends, jurymen, and witnesses. Pay! pay! that's all. For you will have the gods themselves as adjutants.

Know Thyself.

When thou wouldst know thyself and who thou art, look on the grave-stones as thou journeyest by. There are the bones and unsubstantial dust of men who once were kings, of despots, of the wise, of men who plumed themselves on noble birth, on wealth, and on their fame and bodies beautiful.¹ Yet none of these things availed them aught against Time. Hades is the common lot of mortals all. Look thou on these and know thyself the man thou art.²

"Man is born to trouble."

The man who has the will to undergo all labour may win to every goal ; he is in a fashion rich ; or, by virtue of some knowledge is a philosopher ; or by some regimen he is sound of body—yet, when all's said and done, one thing he cannot find—the way through which one may shun sorrow. For 'tis not merely failure to fare as you desire that causeth grief, but even blessings bring entail of trouble.

Defilement cometh from within.

Young man, methinks it has not dawned upon your mind

That everything is wasted by its native ill,
That all that brings defilement cometh from within.¹
For instance, if you'll notice, rust in iron tools ;
In over-cloak the moths ; the woodworm in the wood ;
And then, again, there's envy, worst of evils all,
The impious propensity of evil souls,
Which hath consumed, consumes, and ever shall consume.

"Tell me where is Fancy bred."

It is worth our while
To wonder where Love's dealings have their origin.
. To what then is a man enslaved ?
A face ? That's nonsense ! All would love the self-same girl,
Their eyes would be for them the same criterion.
Some pleasure in companionship entices love ?
Why, then, in spite of this does one man suffer naught,
But off he goes and mocks, while this man's done for quite ?

Soul-sickness is occasion, and the stricken man,
We must conclude, is wounded by an inward blow.

The League to enforce Justice.

If each of us were glad to join the struggle and to unite in exacting penalty from the offender, deeming as equally his own the injustice that has come to pass, and if we made common cause in the bitter strife, the mischief of bad men would not wax ever greater, but the wicked, held under close surveillance and receiving their due punishment, would be either very scarce or utterly suppressed.¹

Stoic Equipoise.

Hurts and misfortunes bear with grace and dignity. That is the way of any man possess'd of sense, Not his who jerks his eyebrow up and cries, "Ah me!" But his who bears his troubles with self-mastery.

Anti-Expansion.

In the front rank of man's woes is grasping greed. For they who are fain to annex their neighbours' holdings frequently are defeated and fail, and to their neighbours' possessions contribute their own in addition.

The spoken Word.

The spoken word is man's physician in grief. For this alone has soothing charms for the soul. And the wisest men of olden times call this a dainty drug.

When making sacrifice I never prayed for my whole household's safety, but I used to leave that out. It is a very useful thing to have indoors a house-slaves' wrangle self-engendered.

UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

In the nature of things there is no way of cheating by argument a burst of wrath. This at the moment holds sway; but when it is once past its fury, there will appear what is more expedient.

Even if you're deeply grieved do not when much excited act hastily in anything. For the wise man ought above all, in the midst of trouble, to hold sway over senseless wrath.

Now you are giving me such advice as it is right you should, but know this precisely: 'tis not your words but my own character that persuades me to do my duty.

De Calumnia.

There's naught more distressing than calumny; for you must necessarily take unto yourself as your own fault the error inherent in another.

.....
Now whosoever lightly yields assent to slander is either bad himself in character or has outright the judgment of a child.

The Leader.

The man elected as a leader of his fellow-citizens should have that power of eloquence which does not engender envy but is blended well with noble character.

Patrimony v. Matrimony.

To be rightly happy a man must needs inherit from his father. For the dower that enters the house with a wife is a possession that brings neither security nor charm.

Who gives the Groom away?

Whenever one who is poor and who elects to marry receives the dower along with the bride, he does not take her, but gives himself away.

There are two things which the man intending marriage ought to consider: whether her face is winning at least or her disposition good. For these engender mutual harmony.

The dour Dowry.

The man who would fain take to wife a wealthy heiress is either paying off some score of the gods' wrath or else he wishes to be luckless while hailed as "lucky man."

Excessive luxury becomes somehow overproud, and wealth strands its possessor and leaves him with a different character and not the man he was before.

For 'tis better, if one considers in the light of reason, not to possess much with discomfort, but little with a relish, and painless poverty is preferable to embittered wealth.

For 'tis impossible to find a dwelling where the dwellers have no ills, but unstinted store of these is bestowed on some by Fortune, and on some by Character.

O Fortune, thou who takest delight in shifting change of every sort, the reproach is thine, whenever any man though just falls into mishaps unjustified.

For him who is ill at ease in his body there is need of a physician, but need of a friend for him whose soul is ill. For loyal words have the secret of healing grief.

Fact stranger than Fiction.

In life of mortals there is not, nay, nor could there come to pass, a single thing beyond our credence. Time and men's ways embroider many an unexpected marvel on life's web.

Fortune a Scapegoat.

Fortune cannot possibly have any corporeal existence; but the man who cannot bear events in Nature's way calls his own character Fortune.

UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

Thankless by nature always is the man who has been saved. No sooner has pity been shown than the gratitude is gone which in his hour of need he vowed he'd feel for ever.

If I now assert that my staff is made of gold, wherein will its wood be aught the more august for me? The august must needs be real, not empty show.

There is nothing more luckless than a poor man. He toils at all things, loses sleep, and works away, only to have another come and have his share and take possession.

"The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away."

Fellow, don't keep on groaning, do not grieve in vain. The things which Fortune lent to you—money, and wife, and crop of many children sown—she has taken back again.

She hesitates perhaps because she has sense. But a woman can always by her ready tears gain a respite for her soul's suffering.

The gods afflict us married men above all others; for there is ever necessity of celebrating some festival.¹

“Oslerizing.”

That's a fine custom, Phanias, of the Ceians—that a man who can't live well does not continue to live ill.¹

It is proof of lowest character when a man, who is ill-spoken of, does not grow enraged.

Now I am unintelligent, exceedingly frugal, but he's a wastrel, lavish, exceedingly rash.

May she, the noble-sired, laughter-loving maiden Victory, attend us ever with good will.

Greeks are men, not brutes devoid of sense, and due reflection accompanies their every action.

Folly is a self-chosen misfortune for mortals. Why, when you are wronging yourself, do you lay the blame on Fortune?

Grievous indeed it is to commit such transgressions that we who have done them hesitate even to speak of them.

It seems to me, Philoumene, to be sheer folly to perceive what one ought to perceive and then not to guard against what one ought to guard against.

The one who does not carry lightly any of life's blessings is senseless, not blessed.

For the crowd the incredible¹ has sometimes greater power and is more credible than Truth.

UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

Then is when you most must fear women, when they veneer a thing with fine words.

A courtesan who is wont to make of dishonour her revenue never makes honour a subject of care.

Either you must not wed a wife or, if you take her once for all, you must close your lips and endure the big dowry and the dame.

It is a painful thing for a man who has won success in life to have his house barren of an heir.

There is nothing more wretched than a father, except another one who is father of more children.

A mother loves her child more than a father does, for she knows it's her own while he but thinks it's his.

A marriageable daughter, even if she utters never a word, by her very silence says most of all about herself.

Cause your father no distress, knowing this: that he who loves most is also angered for the least cause.

There is no more pleasant thing to hear than when a father speaks words of praise to his son.

Never a word of truth is wont to be found in threat of father to his son or of lover to his beloved.

The harshest man, rebuking a son, in his words is bitter, but in his action is a father.

Irrational wealth, when it has acquired power in addition, renders senseless even those who seem wise.

Better is the possession of small wealth without suspicion than large wealth which one must receive in open shame.³

Amongst the natural ills of man there is, if one but look at it aright, no greater pain than grief.

Of all the many evils common to all men by nature the greatest evil is grief.

Those who seem to be fortunate are magnificent on the outside, but in their inward parts are on a par with all men.

Nothing grieves me more than when good character is locked up fast in the hardships of life.

It is most pitiable when on the threshold of old age just character has received the shock of an unjust fortune.

Time is healer of all the necessary ills. And even you he now will heal.

My lord and master, for mortals who are wise it is possible in good time to look into what's the truth.

Thy talk is freighted with much mother-wit, but thy actions are seen to have no wit at all.

Thy talk, boy, runs fair along the straight high-road, but thy action strikes off by another path.

The one who has no wisdom but who chatters much on every point exhibits his character in his words.

It is far better to have come to know one thing thoroughly than to be superficially dressed up with many.

Whenever you talk much but do not learn, you will be in the position of having imparted your store of knowledge without learning mine.

The selecting of those like to oneself somehow is most apt to bring unity out of life's blending.

UNIDENTIFIED MINOR FRAGMENTS

Let not an ungrateful man be deemed a friend nor let the miscreant be ranked with the good.

The man who pledges his oath to a woman and then does naught that is just, is no righteous man.¹

May I be injured by the rich, not by the poor ; for it is easier to put up with the despotism of superiors.

A malefactor who assumes the guise of mildness is a concealed snare for his neighbours.

I hate a poor man who makes presents to the rich.
It is evidence of his starveling lot.

Gold knows how to be tested by fire, and loyalty among friends is tested when a crisis comes.

A friend who for the opportune moment flatters him that prospers is by nature friend, not of his friend, but of the opportunity.

Show gratitude the rather to the absent ; for towards one who is present it is all too attentive.

If you go in for wisdom, do not make intimates of those who lack wisdom or you will bear the name, yes, you, of utterly unwise.

Don't tell your secret to your friend and you'll not fear him when he turns into an enemy.

For he who 'gainst another seeks to do some unjust thing experiences himself a foretaste of the issue of that wrong.
